SITUATION UNCHANGED.

The Half Breeds as Strong as Ever With a Tendency to Gradually Solidify.

Platt Losing Ground and Apparently Stepping Out of the Race.

Conkling Fully Endorses Senator Mahone's Course in Virginia Politics.

CONKLING TO MAHONE. ALBANY, June 2-1 a. m.—Conkling has sent a telegram to Mahone (Virginia) for public use, fully endorsing Mahone's course in Virginia politics, and recommending all friends of good government to support Mahone's policy.

SITUATION UNCHANGED. The situation in the senatorial contest remains the same as in yesterday's dispatches. The stalwarts have made no gains and suffered no losses. Conkling's strength remains fixed, but Platt is losing ground and is apparently stepping out of the race. The "half-breeds" are as strong as ever, maintaining the scattering vote, with a tendency to gradually solidify.

An analysis of the vote of yesterday shows no change in the situation, either the democratic, "half-breed" or stalwart vote, each polling the full vote of their assemblymen present. At a joint caucus every republican voted not cast for Conkling as set down as a "half-breed." The "half-breed" instruction was to remain scattered until a favorable opportunity arose for their uniting, when a recess would be voted and a caucus held to instruct.

The tendency among many "half-breeds" is to follow the lead of Wheeler for Conkling's place, and towards either Cornell or Dewey for Platt's place. A majority of the "half-breeds" will support Platt's term and Dewey for Conkling, and in combination for that outcome, instructions have been given to Dewey gradually to avoid the appearance of a favorable opportunity for uniting with him as considered a better plan.

Thieves Arrested. NATIONAL ASSOCIATED PRESS. ST. LOUIS, June 1-10 p. m.—E. J. King and John F. Fitzgerald, the alleged robbers of General Grant's baggage were brought to this city to-day. King insisted that he bought the baggage and other jewelry from a colored porter on the sleeping car, to whom he gave twenty dollars for them. The officers, however, do not believe his statement. Fitzgerald has been in the St. Louis express company since June, 1880. It is not believed he had anything to do directly with the robbery, as Grant's baggage was not in the hands of the express company. King and Fitzgerald, however, were old friends, having been brought up at Louisville. Fitzgerald's explanation of his connection with the matter is that King and himself got on a drinking spree at Topeka, Kan., and when he became sober he found King and himself both decorated with crosses and badges. The urged King at that time to return to Grant, but King would get on the ground that he would get a big reward for them. Fitzgerald says he does not know what King finally did with them. At the time General Grant left here in a special car for the south, King was a special baggage man on the train.

It is not believed he had anything to do directly with the robbery, as Grant's baggage was not in the hands of the express company. King and Fitzgerald, however, were old friends, having been brought up at Louisville. Fitzgerald's explanation of his connection with the matter is that King and himself got on a drinking spree at Topeka, Kan., and when he became sober he found King and himself both decorated with crosses and badges. The urged King at that time to return to Grant, but King would get on the ground that he would get a big reward for them. Fitzgerald says he does not know what King finally did with them. At the time General Grant left here in a special car for the south, King was a special baggage man on the train.
