Some Mysterious Facts in the Cas Still Unexplained.

E. L. Winslow, of the Union Pa yesterday with the remains of B. This proposition will be held open his home here a week ago last Sunday. According to the story as gleaned found in the Missouri river on the Iowa side six miles below Pacific Junction. It appears that on Sunday afternoon a farmer, named David in that vicinity, accompanied by hound. When he had nearly reached the river, the dog ran ahead apparently on a scent. He soon returned to the farmer's side and with many demonstrations seemed to urge his the long weary journey. wner to follow him. Fowler did so and the animal led him to the side of stream, where in the midst of a pile of driftwood, he saw a human body. The body lay face upwards, and was clothed in neither coat nor vest. Otherwise it was completely dressed. After ed in bringing the remains to the shore and placing them upon dry land. papers or other things by which to identity him were discovered. After his return home Coroner Cole happened to pick up a copy of THE BEE containing a long account of De Loska's disappearance, with a detailed description of him. The general outline of the description corresponded with that of the unknown man he had just buried and when he saw the mention of the watch chain with its peculiar pendant he was thoroughly satisfied of the dead man's identity. He accordingly telegraphed at once to the Union Pacific headquarters in this city, as mentioned in yesterday's paper, and the result was that Mr. E. L. Winslow started for Pacific Junetion. Arrived there Mr. Winslow took several assistants and drove in a wagon to the spot where the remains were interred. He had recognized by the articles found upon the man's person that he was none other than De Loska. The remains were exhumed after a great deal of hard labor and such found to be the case. The body was of course badly decomposed, but recent indisposition and is able to be about Mr. Winslow had no difficulty in recognizing De Loska in the general outline. One peculiarity that made although he weighed in

Do Loska easily recognizable was that neighborhood of two hundred pounds he wore a remarkably small shoe. The work of exhumation lasted long into the night. The body was then transferred into a different Miss Snyder and Miss Abbott, arrived in casket and the party started for Pacific Junction, which was reached early this morning. Mr. Winslow arrived here with the body over the C., B. & Q. some hours later. The body was at once taken to Coronor prepared for interment and there it was visited by many of De Loska's

From the appearance of the body De Loska must have been in the river over a week.

There are some circumstances still connected with De Loska's case that have not been explained satisfactorily and are yet deemed suspicious. Before the matter is allowed to rest a Meat Market on Tenth street, near full investigation will probably be the U. P. depot.

Good Results.

Whatever may be said of the Slocumb law no one can but acknowledge that the enforcement of the clause which inflicts a fine of $10 and costs upon a person for appearing on the streets in a drunken condition is exercising a beneficial effect in Omaha. It has been only a couple of months since this has been enforced, yet in that short time the number of charges of drunkenness daily in the police court has been reduced fully onehalf. Not only is this remarkable reduction desirable, but there is still another feature in the result which is more so. Of this number so rapidly being reduced, a large proportion are of that class called "chronic," regular drunkards, who heretofore had been accustomed to appear for trial in the police court regularly at least twice
