A Romance of Indian Life.

Major Gordon, of the Second Infantry, was well acquainted with Spotted Tail, the Sioux chief, who was killed by Crow Dog at Rosebud agency.

He first saw him at Fort Laramie in 1866, he having come thither on an errand so sad that it affected his after life.

He brought there the body of his favorite daughter for burial, and officers of the post, with other white residents of the neighborhood, took part in the obsequies.

Spotted Tail killed a number of ponies at the funeral and nailed the skulls on the posts supporting the coffin.

These skulls still remain, and every year the commanding officer sees to it that the coffin is decorated with flowers and streamers.

The daughter had a romantic history, which is familiar to many army officers and plainmen.

She fell in love with Lieutenant Brockton Livingston, an old Second Dragoon, and a direct descendant of the famous Chancellor Livingston of New York.

He seems to have reciprocated her love and they lived together as man and wife, though bound by no legal ties.

Livingston at length took sick, became a prey to dementia, was sent to Europe, and there died.

The poor girl awaited his return long and anxiously, and guarded as dearer than her heart's blood his son, a bright boy two or three years old.

At length the news of his death reached her, and the wife—for so she considered herself, of so her native friends considered her—pined a few months with a slowly breaking heart, and then died.

Her last words were the few English words of endearment Livingston had taught her in her days gone by.

Spotted Tail took the little boy and the young widow had first met her and then married her.

Mrs. Livingston, the mother of the lieutenant, is still living in New York, or was a short time ago, and has instituted inquiries relative to the son spoken of, with a view of caring for and educating him, but all trace of him was lost, or his dusky relatives preferred to keep him with themselves.

When I was a boy in a printing office in Missouri, a loose-jointed, long-legged, tow-headed, jeans-clad, countrified cub of about sixteen lounged in one day, and without removing his hands from the depths of his trousers pockets, or taking off his faded rim of a slouch hat, whose broken brim hung limp and ragged about his ears.

up the middle aisle of the village church Sunday night with a starning hand bill pinned between his shoulders.

The joker spent the remainder of the night after church, in the cellar of a deserted house, and Nicodemus sat on the cellar door till toward breakfast time to make sure that the prisoner remembered that if any noise was made rough treatment would be the consequence.

The cellar had two feet of stagnant water in it, and was bottomed with six inches of mud.

Before a very long time had elapsed the village smarties began to feel an uncomfortable consciousness of not having made a very shining success of their attempts on the simpliciton.

Experiments grow scarce and chary. Now the young doctor came to the rescue. There was delight and applause when he proposed to scare Nicodemus to death, and explained what he was going to do.

He had a noble new skeleton—the skeleton of the late and only local celebrity, Jimmy Finn, the village drunkard—a grisly piece of property which he had bought of Jimmy Finn himself, at auction, for $50, under great competition.

When Jimmy lay very sick in the tanyard a fortnight before his death, the litty dollars had gone promptly for whisky, and had considerably hurried up the change of ownership in the skeleton.

The doctor would put Jimmy Finn's skeleton in Nicodemus's bed.

This was done—about 10:30 in the evening. About Nicodemus's usual bedtime—midnight—the village jokers came creeping stealthily through the "jimson" weeds and smelters towards the lonely frame den.

There sat the long-legged pauper on his bed, in a very short shirt and nothing more. He was darning his legs, and looking back and forth, and wheezing the music of "Compton Races" out of a paper overlaid comb which he was pressing against his mouth; by him lay a new jaws-harp, a new top, a solid Indian-bur ball, a handful of painted marbles, five pounds of "store" candy and a well gnawed slab of gingerbread as big and as thick as a volume of sheet music.

He had sold the skeleton to a traveling quack for $3 and was enjoying the result.

Parting With the Family Pet. The other morning, while the proprietor of the approaching circus and menagerie was picking his teeth on the steps of the Russ house, a tall sun-burned, bald-headed man, with pine burrs in his clothes and a sack of sasaparilla in his mouth, approached and said:

"Be you the wild-animal man, mister?"

The proprietor of the circus admitted that such was the fact.

"Then," proceeded the man from the mountains, "I think I'll get you to make me an offer for a large-sized California lion I've got."

"Good specimen, eh?" asked the circus man.

"Good!" Well, I should say so. Measures eleven feet from the tip of his nose to the tip of his tail. Caught him myself when a cub. Just four years old to-morrow.

"Hum—good appetite?"

"Appetite! Great Scot—appetite! Well, I should smile—that's just the point—that's just why I'm parting with Jay—I call him Jay Gould because he takes everything in. If it wasn't for his appetite and the queer little things it makes him do, I wouldn't part with Gould for a fortune."
