THE MANCO'S RUINS.

Interesting Description of a Visit to the Manco's Ruins in Montezuma Valley. Having decided to break away from the humdrum routine of every day life, we, on the 27th day of July, loaded ourselves, our beds, and three days provisions promiscuously into three wagons and started for the Montezuma valley, distant to the lower run, or Aztec spring, some thirty miles.

AGRICULTURAL RUINS. The ruins of Montezuma, Colorado are remarkable for their great age, extent, and numbers; and, while we were en route along towards the Montezuma valley, a short sketch of the Manco's agricultural ruins will perhaps not be out of place.

Quite a number of arrow-points, showing excellent workmanship were found here, and several other chipped flints and beads, but our limited time did not admit of any excavations, and at ten o'clock we started homeward.

At this point an old grizzly-bearded man who had been listening slid up and remarked: "Mining suits ain't what they used to be. There's been no real live litigation to speak of since the Raymond & Ely suit with the Hermes in Pioche."

"Well, rather; I traveled four hundred miles on a mule to get to the jury in the trial I struck the town about 9 o'clock at night, and walking into the lead bar-room, inquired if the suit had begun. Inside of half an hour a man came up and asked me what my name was. He wrote it down on his shirt cuff, and then he said: 'Pard, if you want to stay and see the suit, let me see you through on your expenses' and he handed me $500, remarking that he thought the R. & E. had the bulge on the law. I said that I thought that myself, and then I sauntered off. In about an hour a man came to me and told me I was drawn on the jury. I said I didn't mind, and agreed to stand in. About 9 o'clock a man tapped me on the arm and handed me $500, remarking that the Hermes had about all the law and facts on their side that was necessary. He thought I might need a little money for expenses. Of course I took the money, he seemed so anxious to get rid of it, and then I slipped into a back room, and put on a pair of false side-whiskers, a thin silk duster and a hat, and hurried out. I had been carrying under my coat, and I was a changed man. By 10 o'clock I was on a good horse that I paid $300 for, and started off on a prospecting trip. I couldn't bear the idea of holding the scales of justice in a case like that. I was fearful of further corruption, you see. But on the trial I was represented by a proxy. On the road I met old Bill Dawson, dead broke and discouraged. I put him on the lay, and he started double quick for Pioche. He struck the ledge rich, I guess, for when I next heard of him he was driving a spanking team and enjoying life."—Carson Appeal.

Now for the Montezuma valley, land of "magnificent distances." We reached Pegasus spring (the old Mitchell place) about ten o'clock. The spring breaks out from under the rocks at the right hand of McElmo creek, a stream which carries off most of the year. Quantities of excellent choke cherries grow here and were appreciated by the little folks as well as we larger children. A vein of coal crops out some three hundred yards above the spring; and our first ruin is built almost above the spring on a bare rock. It was a circle of masonry, with walls five feet apart. The space between was divided into small rooms or bins, one of which has been cleaned out and measures four feet by five. A portion of the wall is still standing to a height of seven feet and shows good masonry work. The outer layers of stone are dressed to the curve, with walls five feet apart. The space between was divided into small rooms or bins, one of which has been cleaned out and measures four feet by five. A portion of the wall is still standing to a height of seven feet and shows good masonry work.

There are quite a number of ruins scattered around here, but the two hundred foot high, is the principal one, and all that is necessary to describe. The debris of the fallen walls of this building forms a mound 120 feet long by 90 feet wide and 18 feet high, and stands out on the level valley half a mile from the surrounding hills. Portions of the outer and division walls, forming and ceiling timbers, can be seen cropping out over this debris mound; but, what is still better, two rooms remain whole, the ceiling or upper floor having been so well preserved by a hard, black, glazed coating probably formed by smoke that it still supports its immense load of eight feet of masonry and mortar, which, no doubt, the fallen walls of two at least two stories above, these preserved rooms making three stories in all. Two circular depressions, some 20 feet in diameter, mark the site of two circular rooms, which were probably used as general cooking rooms.

A building containing over 200 rooms in Southwestern Colorado, built, perhaps, 1,000 or more years ago, is no small curiosity, and one well worthy of investigation. The assertion that this building contained over 200 rooms may seem a little incredible, but "figures won't lie." We'll proceed to measure. The debris mound, as before stated, is 120 by 90 feet. We will deduct ten feet all around for rubbish, that has fallen outward beyond the walls. This leaves us 100x70 as the original size of the structure. Reducing 100x70 to square feet, we have 7,000 square feet, being the space occupied by the building. The two preserved rooms measure respectively 7x7 and 7x9 and 8 feet high. The walls average two feet in thickness. The average space taken up by the debris mound is a portion of wall would be 9x10 feet, equal to 90 square feet. Now, if we divide the space occupied by the whole building by the space occupied by one room, we will have the number of rooms in the first story. Seven thousand feet divided by 90 is 77. This gives us 77 rooms. But the two round rooms occupied a space equal to about ten square rooms. This leaves us 67 rooms on each floor, exclusive of the two round rooms. The eight or nine feet of wall rubbish resting on the lower room, proves the building to have at least been three stories high. This gives us the sum total 67x3=201 two hundred and one rooms exclusive of the round rooms. Enough outcropping walls can be seen to show that the building was divided into rooms something near the dimensions given. The door ways were very small, twenty inches wide by three feet high, and placed half way from the floor to the ceiling. The 200-roomed house is situated at the head of the Montezuma valley, and is about fifteen miles in a north-west course from the Manco's. The rock used in the construction of the building were transported over half a mile, and where their water supply came from is a question.

Quite a number of arrow-points, showing excellent workmanship were found here, and several other chipped flints and beads, but our limited time did not admit of any excavations, and at ten o'clock we started homeward.

At this point an old grizzly-bearded man who had been listening slid up and remarked: "Mining suits ain't what they used to be. There's been no real live litigation to speak of since the Raymond & Ely suit with the Hermes in Pioche."

Virginia Enterprise. Hank Monk is inconsolable. Last evening in driving from Lake Tahoe to Carson, he experienced the first upset of his life. He left the lake half an hour behind time (the steamer being delayed in crossing the lake by a heavy wind); and was driving at a very rapid rate when the mishap occurred.

He had twelve adults and two children. Eight adults were on top of the coach and the rest with the children inside.

Among the passengers were ex-Army Gen. Devens and daughter, Rev. E. F. Walker and Prof. Jack Hallman, of this city.

The upset occurred at a rough place just this side of the summit. Miss Devens was seated beside Hank when the coach went over. Hank held to the lines like grim death, and, though going at rapid cut, stopped the team almost instantly, the coach not moving a foot after it went over.

As Hank rose from another earth he spat out a mouthful of dust and remarked, "That's the first time it ever happened to me."

Gen. Devens said to his daughter, "There, you've always wanted to have a ride with Hank Monk—now you've had it!"

In five minutes' time Hank again had his coach right side up, and was spinning down the mountain, but not gaily. He felt sore. He said he once upset a bullion wagon, with no one aboard, but never before in his life had he upset a passenger coach.

The only thing that happened to all his folks in his was the fact that he got through to Carson "on time," as he did when he landed Horace Greeley at Placerville. This, and the fact that no one was hurt, except a few very slight bruises, was all he had with which to save his wounded pride.

His passengers rather enjoyed the affair after it was all over, and to the end of their lives will pride themselves on having participated in Hank Monk's first upset.

OLD JERRY. The Way He Was Beaten and Why He Wants Martial Law Declared.

Several days ago old Jerry established a small restaurant, furnished with two pine tables and four benches. It was designed for colored people, and in order to attract the class of custom the old man hung out a sign bearing this piece of intelligence: "Fried Catfish." Next day a malicious rival rubbed out the "fish," leaving the word to infer that the old man sold fried cat; and then entering the restaurant, sat down and asked: "Gin me some of de yaller species."

"I clean grapple de termination of yer adverbs, sah," replied the proprietor. "Gin me some of fine fur sort."

"Yer verb fingers too much in de shade ob de proper noun."

"Gin me a spring kitten."

"Yer leab grammar ain't come down to rithmetic, I down grab de malpunction table ob what yer's tryin' to get through yer."

"Yer sign says dat yer's got fried cat; I want a spring kitten."

"Cat fish, sah, my sign remarks."

"Bet yer a hoes again yer 'establishment dat de sign says fried cat widout de fish."

"All right. De restaurant is up." "De hoes is under ob shed yonder. Yer's a man of honor, so is I. Now let's ride the question."

When the old man looked at the sign he threw up his hands, hardened by toil and wrinkled by years. "De 'establishment is yer own," he said. His rival joyfully acknowledged the willingness with which the old man surrendered the property, when Jerry remarked: "Willin'ness begets willin'ness, don't hit?"

"Yerself is a hoiser, ole man." "But is my statement checked?" "Yes, sah. I'd stike yer arthly sessions on de truth ob yer observation."

"Wal, den, sense yer's so willin' ter take yer restaurant I'll show a equal willin'ness ter take yer hoes. I see a needin' 'ya hoes mo'n I is a restaurant, an' as I see got a bribe handy I'll take de hoes an' go out lectioneerin' for some future office." And before the rival could recover from his surprise, the old man had mounted the horse. But when he did recover, he rushed up, caught him by one leg and dragged him to the ground. A lively fight ensued, and occasionally through a cloud of dust bystanders could see that rheumatism had taken sides against Jerry. When the two men had been separated, Jerry went to the state house, and walked unannounced into the executive chamber.

"Gubner," he said, "I see got a mighty fine case fur yer dis time, and he explained the cause of his visit. 'I wants de military ter take charge ob dis case. Der civil authority, which is myself, fur I see always civil, hab foun' itself unable to get away wid his man. Now, sah, I wants yer ter point me major ob de trouble, order me on active duty, an' let me draw six dollars a day till dis trouble is settled.'"

The governor explained that the matter belonged to the civil department of the state.

"But civil means hab bin 'zausted. I was mighty civil ter dat man. De military is intended to pettek de civil 'thorties, de law says. Wall, den, sen de 'turney ober dar an' let me draw my six dollars a day as a major till he gets through wid de case. No, did I heah yer say? All right, sah. Bout six o'clock dis evening I see a gun fire an' a man holler jes sum ter declusion dat martial law hab been declared. Good day, sah."

Love Your Neighbor. When your friend or neighbor is laboring under bodily affliction, indigestion, biliousness, constipation, catarrh, or other ailments of the kidney or liver, don't fail to recommend Burdock Blood Bitters, a sure and safe remedy. Price $1.00; trial size, 10 cents.

Wicked for Clergymen. Rev. —, Washington, D. C., writes: "I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article made of valuable remedies known to all, that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should freely commend it. I have therefore cheerfully and heartily commended H. P. Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them."—New York Baptist Weekly. aug15-sept1
