Captain John B. Furay Hurt. Captain John B Furay had the misfortune to meet with a severe accident yesterday afternoon. He was helping to build his new barn, and was carrying a heavy piece of timber, when he slipped and fell. He jumped about 18 feetdown a steep bank, carrying the timber with him. It fell upon him, and he was severely bruised about the breast and one of his feet was somewhat injured. He also received a severe cut in the hand.

Mr. Fursy immediately went down town, not to learn the extent of his injuries,

HOLIDAY THOUGHTS.

The Christmas Tide, and What It will Bring to the Various Classes of Humanity.

What a world of joy and contentment peace, love and happiness, or of serrow and pain, discontent, misery and woe lies wrapped up within the next two weeks! and every man, woman and child, no difference what the age or position may be, looks forward with eager expectancy and fond hopes. The child of sixor sever winters is the one, of all humanity, who is the most enthusiastic and impatient, just now, but we all were children once. and each one has still a warm place in his heart for the merry Christmas time. and the coming of Santa Claus is of vast importance. But each one must have his or her individual experience and his peculiar joy or sorrow.

"Sorrow at Christmas time?" Yes; but even joy, and always peace, may come with the sorrow. Into some homes there will come the angel of death, and some ons will begin the new year where 'tis always Christmas time. There will be much sorrow for the lonely ones left behind; much joy for the eternal happi-ness of those gone before.

In many homes will be feasting and revelry, and all the good things that wealth and power can procure. Costly presents will be given each other by the different members of the family, all of this world's goods, that the heart could wish for will be there, and many a man poorer in pocket, will envy his neighbor and spoil his own happiness He will forget that he has anything to enjoy, by wishing he had more. But his more con-tented brother makes the most of what he has, gathers his wife and children about him, envies no man, laughs at the merry prattle of his little ones, until the house is full of good cheer, and he vows that no man ever had such a merry Christmas, and indeed there is often more real enjoyment in the cottage than in the

There is another class to whom Christmas will come. There is the home of misery and woe. The home where a drunken father or, worse still, a drunken mother has no care for the starving children who know not even the true meaning of the work Christmas. There is the nome of struggling poverty. The home where the heart is so loving and kind and the hands so ready to do, but the strength so weak and the world so cold and cruel. There are the boys and girls who have no home—"street Arabs"—we call them. We wonder do any ever stop to think these same little ragamuffins have hearts. Many then: are warm, loving hearts too, which are sometimes cruelly hurt by the careless jest or angry look. Even the hardened ones were innocent little babies once, and who can think of this

Is it right? Where there is already enough and to spare, more is abundantly supplied. The poor, needy and suffering are not once thought of, and Christmas time comes and goes, they have seen no Santa Claus. Could not each one of us, who are more favored by the goddess of fortune, contribute something to the enjoyment of our unfortunate fellow creature? and would we not at the same time add much to our own present and future happiness Selfishness is not apt to bring happiness to us, and are we not selfish when we have so much more than we need and do not help our suffering brothers and sisters? For we are all members of one family, all alike susceptible of suffering and happiness. For trelis, verandas, plant the hardy nursery-grown double white, double pur-ple, and single clematis. These hardy ines are the longest and most excellent bloomers cultivated. For particulars in planting fine shrubbery of any class, it the spring, address E. H. ELLIOTT, Omaha, Neb.
