GOULD and Vanderbilt both say if the alliance is ratified Union Pacific will drop to $50. Altogether, the outlook is not promising for the old road, and the report that Sydney Dillon is to retire from the presidency only adds to the scare in Wall street.-[Chicago Herald.

What's the matter now! Has not Vanderbilt a controlling interest in Union Pacific, and is not Gould one of the directors? Was not Gould's vote cast in favor of the tri-partite agreement? Are we to conclude from this that Vanderbilt and Gould propose to squeeze out the minority, and buy up all their Union Pacific stock at a loss of fifty per cent?
