Warren county has a case that bids fair to double discount English landlords against Irish tenants. In the fall of 1882 a Mr. Martin came here with his family from Ohio.

A few days ago the landlord placed the lease in the sheriff's hands, with directions to seize and sell everything the tenant had, under the chattel mortgage provision writ, and threatened to send the tenant to the penitentiary for selling mortgaged property (the cow just mentioned) if he didn't deliver up everything.

had; and the landlord told him to "git." Neither the family nor the things in the house have yet been removed; and it remains to be seen whether the landlord will really attempt to take from them their victuals and clothes, and turn them out naked in a January wind, or whether he will allow the neighbors to come in and give the family sufficient clothing to keep them from suffering at the eviction, and then try to send them to the penitentiary for wearing this clothing away, and not leaving it for him--for he claims "all that is now or may hereafter" be used on the premises.

THE CAUSE OF THE LYNCHINGS.

Why the Vigilantes Strung Up the Cuddigans at Ouray, Col. The crime for which the lynching was a retribution has already been described in dispatches of the 16th.

The crime for which the lynching was a retribution has already been described in dispatches of the 16th. The accused told how Mary Rose Matthews, a child of 12, was cruelly murdered by her adopted parents; how she was secretly buried by her murderers; how they then attempted to leave the country; how the body was exhumed by the officials and the evidences of her horrible death revealed.

THE INVESTIGATION.

Neighbors became suspicious and reported the case to the officers. Coroner Hazzard determined to investigate, and going to the deserted ranch, exhumed the contents of the lower grave, and took the body to Ouray. A superficial examination revealed the fact that the child had been murdered. The limbs were cut and hacked. The body was slashed and bruised. The face looked as though it had been pounded into a jelly, and the head revealed a wound which had evidently been made with some blunt instrument.

limbs were frozen before death ensued. The manner of the murder, the details of that horrible night, will probably never be known, but the fiendishness of the deed makes the thought revolting.

ELECTRIC ECENTRICITY.

Some Things About It That No Fellow Can Find Out--Talks with an Electrician--An Electric Light by Which Colors Can Be Matched.

"No, sir; the science of electric lighting is not yet perfected, and I doubt whether it ever will be perfected." The speaker was the president of a well-known electric lighting company, whose headquarters and manufactory are in this city.

"Let me give you another illustration. In our manufactory here we will make two 40-light dynamos from precisely the same material, using the same pattern, and the same machinery, and the same operator. We put them in operation from the same shaft, with the same power, and transmit the electric current generated over two lines of wire of equal length, quality, and size. What is the result? One gives 44-light power, and the other falls far short, and is known as a 'slow machine.'"

"But there is no question that certain systems of electric lighting are superior to others. The different systems are characterized by distinct grades of excellence. A good way of judging a light is by its color and steadiness. Do you notice how steady that arc burn, and its white color? Some lights are yellow, while others are violet. The word 'electric' is derived from a Greek word which signifies sunlight. The nearer an electric light approaches sunlight, the better the light will be. As an evidence of the progress attained in this respect, I will mention that Messrs. Farwell & Co. and Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., two of Chicago's largest dry-goods houses, are now using the Van Depoelle light for matching colors.

"As for danger to life, if you have got the nerve, I'll demonstrate the answer to that question with this are light. Ours is what is called the 'low-tension' light. There never has been a man hurt by one of our lighters over for a year.

Running a Farm.

The impression that a farm can run a family would be a matter for astonishment were it not so commonly met with. The writer of this at one time had some connection with a state institution, belonging to which was a farm of some hundred acres, carrying a large quantity of stock.

Permission to inspect the extensive manufactory adjacent to the office was extended and accepted, under guidance of an employe, the presiding genius of the manufactory--the inventor of the system, Mr. Charles J. Van Depoelle--was found in the laboratory superintending the operation of his latest invention. The machine which Mr. Van Depoelle has just perfected, and which first attracted attention in the laboratory, is called the "transformer." Its value lies in its power to transform the electric current drawn from an arc circuit into tension suitable for incandescent lights.

NEBRASKA FARM NOTES.

To show how rapidly real estate is advancing in Sherman county, says The Farmer, we will give one instance, with M. A. Hartley as authority. Last June section 13, town 13, range 14, was sold for $5 per acre. In July it was sold for $6 50, and in December this same piece of property again changed hands, bringing the owner the neat sum of $10 per acre.

Joe Meiers sold to White Brothers last week, fifty-four head of stock, only a few of which were his own raising, but those few were among the best ever shipped from the county. They were high grade Durhams, four cows of them weighing 1,600 pounds each, and four three-year-old heifers that weighed 1,300 pounds.

James Bowles of Spring Ranch, Clay county, after a visit to Missouri, informed The Fairfield News that that state is very short in crops and long on sterms. He says farmers are obliged to pay 75 cents a bushel for corn.

The Nebraska City News thinks that the largest apple crop raised in the state is represented by John Yont, who lives twelve miles south of that city. In 1877 he planted--with the rest of an orchard--an acre of 2-year-old Genetian apples, setting the trees about one rod apart. Last fall he sold from that acre over 700 bushels of apples, on which he realized $475, or at the rate of 65 cents per bushel.

The Pawnee Republican publishes a lesson in figures of what an industrious woman can do. Mrs. A. Briles, living four miles from Pawnee City raised and sold produce during the past year as follows: Butter.....$170 00 Eggs.....38 95 Apples.....56 75 Cider.....12 25 Peaches, dried.....8 70 Cabbage.....1 80 Plums.....19 80 Strawberries.....44 25 Total.....$341 50

Those intending to fasten on a slice of Nebraska soil for the benefit of themselves and children must not let grass grow under their feet; it is slipping away by the hour, and soon that institution known as the land office, as far as the state is concerned will exist only in memory. In other words, if you want government land you will have to hump yourself. The unoccupied lands grow less every day. Nebraska has been heard of, not only down behind the Alleghenies, but the story has been told along the banks of the Rhine. There was a time when these prairies went begging, but that time is past.

Thomas Johnson, who has a farm near Johnston, Brown county, has a load of oats on market last Saturday which he sold for the highest market price paid. Mr. Johnson says the oats were grown on soil that was broken last spring, and that fourteen acres of soil yielded an average of 74 bushels per acre, and Messrs. Alden & Co. pronounce the quality of the oats A. No. 1.--[Ainsworth Journal.]

"Feeders of cattle and hogs throughout Nebraska seem to be suffering this winter season. In different sections disease has attacked the stockers and in many cases deaths enough have occurred to wipe out the expected profits from an entire herd. Otero county has been more fortunate than some, though a number of steers have died in that locality. The largest loss of hogs yet noted is that of A. W. Clark near Salem. He lost seventy head in two days, from some cause unknown. The mortality has been charged up to the soft corn account.

Running a Farm.

The impression that a farm can run a family would be a matter for astonishment were it not so commonly met with. The writer of this at one time had some connection with a state institution, belonging to which was a farm of some hundred acres, carrying a large quantity of stock. In case of a proposed or expected change of farmers some of the applications for the position were astounding as amusing. Men who had never been able to make a living for themselves; men who had filled some low position in town; men whose only claim to knowledge of farming was that they had lived on a farm when boys; idle, drunken campers; street loafers--literally counted themselves abundantly qualified to take charge of $50,000 worth of property and successfully manage it. It has usually been easy to make a living on a farm, and the writer believes there is no legitimate business which requires more ability and sound judgment than does farming, if the highest success is to be secured. Mr. Gladstone, not long since, said in effect that it required more skill and good judgment to manage a farm employing a given amount of capital than to manage a manufacturing or mercantile business with equal capital. He was referring to England, but the statement is not far from correct in America. We need hardly say that no line of farming more decidedly calls for intelligence, sound judgment, business knowledge and capacity, than does the caring for and management of improved stock.

Warren county has a case that bids fair to double discount English landlords against Irish tenants. In the fall of 1882 a Mr. Martin came here with his family from Ohio. He wanted to rent a farm. Places were then scarce. He finally rented a rough eighty, with moderate improvements and only partly broken out, for three years, at $240 a year, cash rent. A lease was drawn up, at the dictation of the landlord, containing all the usual restrictions and the following clause: "And I now agree with the said lessor that said rent is and shall continue to be a lien upon all property that is now or may hereafter be used or kept by me upon said premises, whether the same be exempt from execution or not; and I now make this contract a mortgage lien thereon, as well as upon all crops grown upon said premises, without waiting for the maturity of said rent."

A few days ago the landlord placed the lease in the sheriff's hands, with directions to seize and sell everything the tenant had, under the chattel mortgage provision writ, and threatened to send the tenant to the penitentiary for selling mortgaged property (the cow just mentioned) if he didn't deliver up everything. Yesterday the sheriff seized everything he could find--team, wagon, harness, farming implements, produce, everything raised on the place, two cows, calves, three hogs, some pigs, sewing machine, cook stove, beds, bedding, household and kitchen furniture, provisions, clothing--everything the tenant
