TONS OF HARD CASH.

Interesting Facts About the Count Recently Completed in the National Treasury.

On the 25th of last month the press dispatches announced the appointment of a committee to count the moneys in the United States treasurer's office in Washington, and a few days ago it was announced that the count was practically completed. The report of the committee was completed to-day, shows that the United States Treasurer, William M. McKim, has reported on the 30th ult. is correct. This "treasury count" is necessitated every time there is a change made in the office of United States treasurer, so in this case Mr. Jordan having succeeded Mr. Wyman, three gentlemen, Mr. Cassell, representing the old going treasurer; Mr. Smith, the new treasurer; and Mr. Dakans, representing the secretary of the treasury were appointed to superintend the count. Forty expert counters and as many clerks, who kept the records, were steadily at work nearly three weeks counting the paper money, bonds, etc., and a dozen clerks and as many laborers were hard at work for a week or ten days counting the gold and silver coin in the vaults.

Some idea of what is involved in a treasury count may be gained by a mere statement of the vast sums of money handled, counted and verified in this recent count. The specie handled aggregated nearly $12,000,000, about 9,000,000 silver dollars and a half million minor silver coins, and $2,500,000 in value of gold coin. The silver coin weighed about 270 tons, and the gold coin about four and one-half tons. This hard money, strictly speaking, was not counted but weighed. The silver dollars, when originally placed in the vaults, were put in bags, each containing $1,000, coin and bags weighing fifth-zins and a quarter pound; the gold was in bags containing $5,000 in each bag, gold weighing eighteen and a half pounds. An actual count by pieces was only made of a few bags on the start to ascertain the proper and exact weight of a bag of $1,000 in silver or $5,000 in gold, and afterward of such bags as were not satisfactory in weight. But very few bags either of the silver or gold fell short of the standard weight, and in such instances actual counts showed the required number of coins, but with a few of them surreptitiously abraded to account for the deficiency in the weight of the bags and contents. When the last bag was weighed and the record footed up not a dollar, not a cent was missing, so the committee report, and as Treasurer Jordan may feel certain his predecessor, Mr. Wyman, has turned over to him every dollar of hard money that the latter claimed was in the vaults here on April 30.

The paper moneys and securities handled embraced a reserve fund of nearly $164,000,000, made up of $31,000,000 in United States notes, $104,000,000 in gold certificates, and about $29,000,000 in silver certificates; also interest checks and coupons aggregating $8,000,000, unclaimed clearing house certificates amounting to $55,000,000, and bonds and coupons amounting to $345,000,000, a total of $872,000,000, which, added to the $12,000,000 in coin and paper values, as the result of the committee's work. The count of the paper and securities was satisfactory as that of the coin. Every item of paper assets, United States notes, bonds, gold and silver certificates, was examined and counted piece by piece, and each and every package found intact and correct, and the aggregate in some instances running up into the millions, was found to correspond exactly with the records of the books in the reserve, loan and redemption divisions, and in the cashier's room of the treasurer's office.

THE PLANCHETTE.

A Wonderful Little Board That Writes Without Human Aid.

There are some indications that the mysterious little planchette board, like rook playing, coming into fashion again. No adequate explanation of it has ever been received, though many have been offered. The construction is as you see, a plain, heart shaped cedar board fixed upon two metal legs, to which are adjusted wheels that move easily and light in all directions. At the point of the heart a hole is made, and a set of four pens or pencils, fixed in an ordinary pencil firmly. That is all there is to it.

Put a pencil at the point, as you see, put two hands upon the board, as you also see. After keeping the hands lightly and quietly in their places a few minutes, planchette will often begin to write. It usually scribbles yes and no, and sometimes a word or two of no importance must be attached. This is claimed positively, however, that the board has written intelligent answers to these questions, which those holding their hands upon it could not possibly be aware of. It may be. But before believing this is true, ask some questions and see for yourself. It is one of those cases in which the word of no second person must be taken. Above all, do not have any superstitions about the thing, taking for granted that the writing is done by spirits.

A NEW TABLE TIPPER.

Villagers Mystified and a Seneca Indian Badly Scared by a Young Woman.

The little village of Steamburg, four miles east of Randolph, N. Y., is agog with excitement over the remarkable mediocritic achievements of Miss Carrie Nutting, who was recently graduated from the Chamberlain Institute in Randolph with honors. About a week ago she was sitting at a small table in her father's house, with her hands resting idly upon the table, when the table began to move, compelling Miss Nutting, as she says, to follow it about the room. It came to a halt directly in front of the picture of her grandfather, who died some years ago. Members of the family call to mind the fact that the spot at which it formerly stood was that the old gentleman used to sit at while writing letters.

The next day at about the same hour the young woman was getting out of the window, thinking over the peculiar circumstances of the previous day, when, as she explains it, a gradual laetitude took possession of her, and although she had never been known to sing, she began chanting some weird, sweet melody, which the family say they never heard a quail. As the music died away she began repeating a poem, the words of which none of those present had ever heard. This trance wore off in about half an hour, and the young woman says she has no recollection of doing anything unusual, nor did she experience any fatigue.

By this time the news of the strange behavior of Miss Nutting had spread among the neighbors, and the following afternoon twenty-five or thirty persons had gathered to witness the phenomena, nearly all being skeptical as to the stories set afloat. Shortly after 3 o'clock, while the sun was shining brightly into the window, the young woman seated herself at the table, looked at a picture of her grandfather, and the table soon moved and was gradually raised from the floor. A lumberman who happened in with the others, thinking there was some trick, seated himself upon the end of the table, but notwithstanding his added weight it continued to rise, and sailed about the room in such a mysterious way that Milton Sylvester, a Seneca Indian from the reservation near at hand, made a break for the door, and did not stop in his mad rush until he crossed the boundary line of the reservation. The Indians now take a roundabout road rather than pass the home of Miss Nutting.

After the table had ceased its wanderings, gold coins were seen falling from her finger and dropped upon the window sill; a series of rappings followed, and some of those present, say they received through the medium, messages from departed friends, and from people whom she could never have known.

Virtue in the Family.

There are all sorts and degrees of virtue, and sometimes we are told that virtue is its own reward. Mr. A. F. Evans of Burr's Ferry, La., says, in writing about Brown's Iron Bitter, "I have been the recipient of a benefit in my family to a considerable extent." This great iron tonic has superior advantages as a reliable family medicine. Its power has been thoroughly tried, and its virtues abundantly proved. Nearly a million bottles a year are sold by the druggists of this country.

A Pet Crow Dies of Sorrow.

Erie (Pa.) Special to Cleveland Leader. (George M. Doll, a Mill Creek farmer, a few years ago caught a young crow, which he reared and by perseverance succeeded in teaching it to say many things. The pet was called "Jim," and he was made so much of by Mr. and Mrs. Doll, who were children, that he seemed almost human. Six months ago Mr. Doll sickened, and in a couple of weeks died of pneumonia. "Jim" sat on a chair beside his master during his entire illness, and when the hour of dissolution came, "Jim" looked his master in the face, lamented, and repeatedly said, "Oh, dear George," and similar endearing things. After Mr. Doll's spirit had gone the pet crow hopped up onto the pillow and gave vent to the most piteous cries. The grief-stricken bird refused to leave his master, and after the body was lowered down the hill and gazed sorrowfully down through the bars at the features of the dead, breaking out repeatedly in such expressions as "Poor George," etc. "Jim" refused food and could not be forced from his perch until the casket was closed. When the casket was borne from the house "Jim" flew after it uttering shrill noises indicative of extreme anguish. As the funeral procession moved on, the crow followed, crying out "Dear George," and a portion of the time was perched upon it. At the cemetery he flew upon the top of a monument close to the open grave, and remained there till the body was covered from sight. After the conclusion of sorrowing friends had turned away from the grave, "Jim" fell down upon it and gave way to the most piteous cries of grief. It might be come flying home tired and cold. Next morning bright and early flew off in the direction of the cemetery, and was found there fluttering and stalking up and down the grave like a sentinel on duty. Day after day he returned to the grave of his dead. One day, three months after the death of Mr. Doll, the hired man, Fred Dwell, was called to a horse, and the morning of the funeral "Jim" rode to the cemetery on the horse and from that day never returned, but day in and day out through the severest weather he might have been found there keeping his silent vigil over the grave which held all that was dear to him. Mrs. Doll had a comfortable house built for "Jim" and he was finally carried to him. "Jim's" demonstration of sorrow gave way to silent grief, and his tender cries for "Poor George," were substituted by suppressed moans. His appetite began to decrease, and his glossy black feathers which he used to dress with so much care were neglected entirely Sunday when the widow went to visit a friend, and she saw that "Jim" had been carried off to the mill by the hired man, who was almost overcome at finding poor "Jim" lying with his wings spread out cold and lifeless upon the head of the grave, a victim of an uncontrollable consuming grief that could not be assuaged. "Jim" had been faithful until death.

A NEW TABLE TIPPER.

Villagers Mystified and a Seneca Indian Badly Scared by a Young Woman.

Boston, May 15.—Edwina Booth, the tragedian, was this afternoon a participant in a little drama of real life at her residence, 25 Chestnut street, attending the marriage festivities of her daughter, Miss Edwina Booth, and Mr. Ignatius G. Greeman. The guests, who numbered sixty, included friends from New York and other cities. They were ushered into the house from their carriages under a long canopy between the sidewalk and the main door, which was overhung with sprays of smilax. Just inside the door the eye was greeted with a luxurious arrangement of hydrocortis and palms, which half concealed the orchestra and formed an admirable foreground for a bride and groom. On ascending the broad staircase, around which were twining flowers, the guests found a novel and unique arrangement of rustic floral fence, forming the two sides of a curving aisle, which led to a transverse section of similar fence crossing the head of the front parlor or near the bay windows. In the windows were three gates tied with silken cords, and on every hand were strewn flowers. Over the interior, inside the middle gate, where the marriage ceremony was performed, was hung one of the most exquisite floral devices that has been made for an interior for many years. The scene was a picture of interest, and the effect was enhanced when the notes of the Swedish wedding march were heard from the orchestra below, with the intermingling sounds of silver chime bells. The ceremony was simple and impressive, and at the close, as the clergyman passed out by the side gate of the rustic fence, the wedding party stood around to witness a picture of rare interest, and the effect was enhanced when the notes of the Swedish wedding march were heard from the orchestra below, with the intermingling sounds of silver chime bells. How It Came About.

Her Marriage with the Ugliest Man She Ever Saw in Her Life.

Washington Critic. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the reporter of the Ohio were talking last night about ex-Attorney-General Brewster. Reference was made to the fact that Mrs. Brewster was a granddaughter of Benjamin Franklin, and that after her husband died she was a clerk in the treasury department. "I will tell you," said the gentleman from Pennsylvania, "about the first meeting between the ex-attorney-general and his wife, Brewster, as a lawyer, had some business before the bureau of the treasury in which his wife was employed. He went into the room in which she was at work. Looking up and catching sight of her future husband, she involuntarily exclaimed to the lady seated next to her: 'Well! That is the ugliest man I ever saw in my life!'" distance behind the mare that he was "at the start, and when we began to go down the back stretch I saw that it would be quite a heat. The rates of the Chicago is over a quarter of a mile long, and as we swung into it, the Maid gave a wobble or two, and was evidently getting ready for a break. When she finally went into the air, I sent Rarus right up to her.

"Hit her a crack," said I to Budd.

"So he let her have the whip, and she gave a jump or two that could make a deer look sick. Then he caught her, and we came home a flying, the mare beating Rarus out by a nose.

"When Budd got out of the sulky he says to me: 'The old mare kind of wobbles to-day, and does not seem able to go any.' 'You will find she pulled you a mile to-day about as fast as she ever went in her life,' said I, for Rarus showed me he was going well, and when that horse got in a hurry it was safe to wager that there would be a race. Pretty soon out came the board with 2:14 on it, and we knew that the money was ours."
