

MILLER GETS HIS DAUGHTER

A Long Continued Litigation in the Federal Court Ended.

A PATHETIC SCENE ENACTED.

The Little Girl Clings Fondly to Her Grandparents, Who Are Forced to Give Her Up—Other Court News.

The United States Court.

The long continued litigation in the United States district court for the possession of little Evelyn Miller was concluded yesterday.

The history of the case, which is very familiar, will, however, bear repeating. About eight years ago Miller married the only daughter of Bureau. Later Evelyn was the result of the union. When she was about seven months old her mother died and she was given in charge of her grandparents, who have kept her ever since.

Then came the father with a demand for his child. He wanted her again and wanted his little girl. The old father and mother had become so attached to their darling that they could not give her up.

Miller invoked the aid of the law. From the district court the case came to the United States court. Every known process of law was resorted to by the attorney who conducted the case for the father, but to no purpose. The case was decided in favor of the father, and yesterday afternoon Judge Duffy decided that Miller should have his child.

No man was ever more heartily condemned by an audience than was Miller yesterday afternoon by the throng that packed the courtroom. All the parties interested, including the child, were present. The little one sat in her grandmother's lap crying bitterly, while the old lady wept with her. While apparently struggling to control his emotion the old man was unable to do so and his face was a picture of the pearly drops trickling down his cheeks. The scene was pathetic in the extreme, and but few eyes in the courtroom were free from moisture. Mournful and despondent sobs were heard around the room and many were the indignant glances cast at Miller.

Finally Mr. Lamberton, the attorney for Mr. Miller, arose to make a last appeal. He wished, he said, to submit the proposition to the court. The case was in fact the court's hands and would be the final order was signed. He had one favor to ask in behalf of the bereaved grandparents. For years they had watched with jealous care over the little girl, and she had grown to love her. She was their idol, their joy, their hope, and to totally resign her would cast a shadow over their lives which no could ever remove.

He recalled one who in days gone by had gladdened their home. Her face awakened memories, and she had grown to love her daughter who was called from earth to the fairer land beyond the shining battlements, and who had left her picture in the person of the little one. He begged that the court should make a decree that the child be allowed to visit her grandparents for three or four weeks. It was a small favor to ask. The attorney for Miller did not object.

Judge Duffy stated that he had no power to make such an order. In rendering the decision the court stated that throughout the trial of the case he had been interested in behalf of the grandparents, and that he was deeply sympathized with them in their affliction. That as a court he was willing to take any action to lighten their burden of sorrow, but that in this case he could not make the order requested.

Then the old couple led her away. She shrunk from her father as she passed him in the hallway. Last night she slept for the first time on earth, perhaps, with her father, who she never knew, and the mother who she never saw. The father of the law was not adhered to, but tonight there are several anxious hearts in Nebraska that at least one home in the prairie state is unshaken.

THE POLICE CASE.

Salesman Johnson of the Polack Clothing company was on the stand yesterday afternoon in the United States district court for the insurance company submitted him to a rigid cross-examination, and at times had his nerves badly worked up.

Johnson denied everything which was published in The Bee. He said the check given by Polack was not a check, but a receipt for money. The witness also asserted that he never made any demand on Polack for money for keeping still, and asserted that when he saw the check he was merely supposed that it was a check for $5.00 or $10.00 out of Polack for a good time.

The witness denied making any damaging admissions to A. M. Kitchen or other insurance agents, but admitted that he had asked one man if there was $5.00 in it. Said the witness that he knew the man, and that Polack to the penitentiary and denied saying that he knew more about the fire than Fisher or Jensen.

Fighting for a Boy.

The honest corpus case of William Giles vs. Mary A. Giles was on the stand yesterday for hearing before Judge Johnson.
