empty morphine bottles concealed behind sofas, under the carpet, and in various other out of the way place about the ladies' waiting room of a large retail store has called attention again to the alarming prevalence of the morphine habit among women says the New York Sun. This habit has greatly increased since the inventien of the hypodermic syringe. A jeweler said recently, as a cust per left the store after depositing the little case with its magic needle, which charms away all pain and sor w, slightly broken at the point and in need of adjusting: "You would be surprised if you knew how many of those are brought here to be mended in the course of a year by young, apparently vigorous men, as well as the more infirm, and by ladies most of all. Some of them only come a few times before their suffering is over forever, but the majority of them continue to bring us the little instruments for repairs year after year, growing themselves more untidy s to dress, more unreliable in mood and prematurely aged in appearance."
There seems, indeed, to be a fatal fascination in the hypodermic—its rapid relief from discomfort, its almost instantaneous exhibitantion and stimulation of every fibre of the physical being, its potency in drowning mental pain as well, transforming its victims to a condition in which they are superior to all petty ills and annovances. Wives live upon morphine for years after they have deceived their husbands into believing that they have forsworn it forever, never even when most thoroughly under its influence betraying by look or act their secret. Invalids unable to rise from their pillow have been known to get up and walk to the place of concealment for their favorite remedy in the nurse's absence, and no dishonest means are considered too unworthy to resort to in obtaining the drug secretly. Children born of such women usually inherit the appetite, which manifests itself sooner or later, and frequently babies demand morphine in some of its preparations to sustain life for a time after birth from a morphine-loving mother.

Oriental people indulge in the use of opiates for purely social delight, but with American women the diminishing power of resistance to pain, physical and psychical, and the consequent increased demand for some powerful counteracting stimulant, all have contribnted to a marked increase of the habit. The demands of artificial life, which affected him powerfully. He could not think of backing out, yet how to scrape together the money to do "the thing exhaust more nerve force than is created; the dissipations of society, which hinder natural sleep and rest; continual excitement, strife for place, the afflic-tions and disappointments incident to to cut a long story short, when the wedding day came, the young man who woman's existence, together with intense sensitiveness, both mental and physical, resulting often in exquisite And this is strictly true. The joke was carried much too far. suffering from apparently trivial causes, bring about a condition of nervous prostration—the genuine, not the fashionable disease, in varying degrees of severity-to relieve which physicians frequently recommend narcotics and stimu-lants whose effect is so welcome that the woman herself prolongs the treatment after the physician has ordered its dis continuane It is said that 75 per cent of morphindand of Balambangan, off the coast of ists trace the origin of the habit to some illness where the physician prescribes the drug, then transfers its administration to the patient, who presently succumbs to the habit through her inability upon fifty miles in circumference, and to control the appetite which each addi tional dose fastens and increases, A prominent young artist, suffering from some slight functional difficulty attended by some pain, but not serious in its results, called any. The northern half of the island is in a physician frequently who administered morphine for relief. After several visits the doctor instructed the young man himself in the administration of the medicine, saying it was needless to call him every time. It was but a short time before the patient's one interest in life centered upon the medicine and how to obtain it. His splendid physique became shrunken, his shoulders bowed as if with age, his dress careless and disordered, his expression vacil lating and anxious, his will power so completely shattered that his repeated attempts to abstain from the use of the drug lasted only while the stimulating effects of the last dose gave him courage to plan but never to carry out the curplanned so enthusiastically.

A once noted belle, now in an asylum for incurable inchriates, took morphine at first as a girl to make her eyes bright. Later in life, when heavier care came or her children were ill, she took it to make her brave and strong in bearing her sorrow's burden, until habit was confirmed. And so the stories repeat themselves. This habit is frequently found among actresses, who, as class are intensely nervous and depend largely upon stimulants of some kind to sustain them during the performance of their roles. While as a rule women use morphine as a relief from pain, and thus acquire the desire for it, there are isolated cases among women of morbid imagination where pure sensuous enjoyment or inability to control an appetite, which is the outgrowth of a feeble organization transmitted by heredity, results in the morphine habit. Asylums contain side by side Incbriates and chronic morphinists, though the latter are less numer-ous in which inherited defective and demoralized will power is the primary ried the grandson of a favorite of Maria cause of ruin. The morphine habit is confined chiefly to women in society and rarely found among the poor or working people. Individuals have varying idiosyncracies as ess to lavish money on trousseaux. One to the amount consumed, some reaching their limit at two or three grains a day of the great conturiers has just told me and others attaining a maximum of sixt or seventy grains. It is seldom that habitues poison themselves fatally with voluminous wedding outfits. "No; the devil will owing to the strong element of decep tion which is a peculiarity of the effect of the drug. The will power is shat-tered, the moral sense lost. At times a drunkard is sober and himself, and a always have his rights. Women of fashion won't dress less well for going through the diverce court." little reliance can be placed on his word A confirmed morphinist is never quite American Grocer: I see that a noted himself, for when the effect of the drug thief out west, swallowed a valuable is gone, he is anxious, apprehensive eager only for another dose, and when under its influence overstimulated to Absent Mindedness. American Grocer: I say, fellow, I'm in a great hurry. Give me two pounds high heroics and resolves. The drunkard makes good resolutions for the future when sober; the morphinist when most thoroughly under the influence of Clarkson (formerly in gent's furnishing goods)—Yes, sir, for yourself, sir? the drug he loves makes out his schedule of reform. Physicians are becoming more careful than formerly in corribing the drug, in allowing the patient to know its nature, or a seminister it for or one grain of opium. But they can sell opium or any of its preparations without a prescription by simply writing the Suyer's name in a book, with a statebe suyer's name in a book, with a statemest of the purpose for which it is to be used. Morphine cannot sold without a prescription by the retail druggist, but wholesale store is unlimited as to count sold. Of course, in spite of these regulations the drug is obtained in many places and its lovers will resort to any deception, strategy or self-denial in other ways in order to obtain it. Permanent cures are rarely effected owing to the debilitated will power of patients, which will not sustain the effort to resist the desire for it even long after the cure is pronounced complete. These patients rarely receive the sympathy they deserve, for they are scarcely more accountable for their conduct than are insane people. Their suffering, both mental and physical, is intense and distressing beyond expression, and their will power the most fatally diseased of all their faculties. Sometimes they rely upon the will of some stronger person, doctor, nurse or friend; but frequently in the end they lose confidence in them and deceive them, or if ever the stronger influence is withdrawn, even temporarily, they fall into deeper and more hopeless bondage than before. After months of suffering bravely borne to break the habit, a single dose obtained in a moment of weakness binds the fetters more firmly than ever; and the caution and sagacity displayed in securing and concealing the drug is only equaled by the maniac's cunning.

Women Who Want to Go to War. Can women fight? Listen to this peti-tion of the women of Galicia to the Emperor of Austria, says the New York Sun. It is not altogether complimentary to the sterner sex, but such as it is it makes interesting reading and here it is Hypnotism by Phonograph.

By the way, did you ever hear of hyp-notizing by means of the phonograph? asks the St. Louis Republic. Well, it is said it can be done, and that is another of the phenomena that have been discovered in relation to the mysterious art At the American medical college here it was discussed not long ago, and there will probably be some experiments very soon in this direction.

The theory of those who maintain that such a thing can be done does not admit that hypnotism is the result of animal magnetism entirely, consequently it is claimed that if the operator speak the words usually employed in the process into a phonograph in the same tone of ordinarily used in hypnotism then leave the subject in the room alone with the phonograph, instructing him to obey every order of the instrument. he will sink into the hypnotic state be fore the phenograph has ceased speak ing.
