Yesterday afternoon a post mortem was held upon the remains of Mrs. Joseph Thomson, who died very suddenly at her home at Tenth and Bancroft streets yesterday morning. The investigation developed the fact that the woman came to her death from the effects of cancer of the stomach.

Theodore Williams, the young man who was found upon the streets last week, suffering with heart disease, died at St. Joseph's hospital yes-terday afternoon. An aunt, Mrs. Jennie Powell, residing at Remson, N. Y., has been telegraphed, and awaiting an answer the remains will be kept at Heafy's morgue.

"A MODEL COUPLE."

The Third of Dr. Lamar's Lectures on "The Family."

Dr. Lamar delivered the third of his lectures on "The Family" at the First Baptist church last night, taking for his text Luke i:xvi: "They were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless,"

The paster spoke as follows: You have doubtless wondered where I would get a text to suit this subject. Some of you often read this bit of scripture, but had forgotten that it was in the gospel of Luke. Others of you have no knowledge of ever having read it. It is not uncommon for even students of the bible to read a passage of scripture often without its making much of an impression upon them. I trust you will hereafter remember this splendld text.

How inexhaustible is the bible! It seems to have its roots in the abysses of creation, and to cast its ight forward until it shines upon the topswist height of evernity. It ramities all 'grang -perience understands all human needs, and touches man in all the moods and tenses of his existence from his birth till he stands amid the splendors of the great white throne. There is no subject in all the range of human observation needing great white throne. There is no subject in all the range of human observation needing treatment within the lids of this one book, the light is turned on. When God began making his book he foresaw every need of his teachers in all ages, and he put in this book material so abundant that "the man of God should be rurnished in it every good work." I have dwelt on this, hoping that many of you, from this hour, may learn to think more of your bibles.

We turn now to this model couple. I do not believe they lived once for all. Their spirit and example has been reproduced in a multitude of cases since. The world has been enriched by such people, and it is this that has inspired a high ideal in the sunny visions of thousands who aspire to conjugal felicity.

Looking at this model couple, the first thing that attracts our attention is their names. "Zacharian" means "God remembers," and "Elizabeth" means "God's oath." How happy that the husband's very name should suggest the remembrance of the heavenly father, and how blessed that the wife's name should be a daily reminder of his unchangeableness. We cannot expect that all husbands can have the name of Zacharian or that all wives can be called Elizabeth, but we think that there should be some blessed fact in their conjugal relation which should keep the Lord's remembrance and oath ever before them, and which should be to them a keep the Lord's remembrance and oath ever before them, and which should be to them a daily inspiration so that they should strive in every possible way to make happy, holy and successful the union in which they are bound. Concerning a model couple, I observe, I.
They must be both religious. The text says of these: "They were both righteous before God." If it be important that there be congeniality and affinity in other things, in order to a well conducted married life, how much more important is it that there should be affinity in religious life. However tender the love, however noble the sentiments, however honorable the effort to make every married life what it should be, there will always be a gap between that couple where only one is a servant of God. It matters not how loyal they may be to each other, there stands that hasm which one of the party will not bridge, and which the other cannot.

and which the other cannot.

Every man should be the priest of his own family. There is no excuse for failure so to be, and yet in many cases if either member of the pair fails to acknowledge the spiritual claims of their nature, it is apt to be the husclaims of their nature, it is abt to be the his-band. Alas! He often puts his thumb in his wescoat and walks off with an embarrassed swagger and says: "Oh, I leave all that to my wife." There seems to be a dominant no-tion among husbands that the grace and holiness and religious love of the wife will answer for the whole household. And thus, instead of the man being the priest of his own home, as God meant him to be, he turns traiter to the most sacred responsibilities of life, and leaves the wife to fulfill all this relationship. Indeed if he always stopped there it would be bad enough, but some times he institutes a mean sort of persecution of his wife on account of her religious convictions. If, in reply to all this, the man says: "Oh, but I don't believe in God, or I don't take any stock in churches or church people." It any stock in churches or church people." It may be a startling reply, but it is nevertheless a true one to say. Such a man is hardly as respectable as the devil. "The devils believe and tremble." I have some times been on the point of advising wives to quit praying for the conversion of their husbands, and to pray instead that they may be struck with a well developed case of cholera morbus, for it is wonderful how a well developed case like this can knock to pieces infidelity. Cholera morbus and infidelity do not agree Cholera morbus and infidelity do not agree long in the same stomach. A beautiful girl of eighteen dying. By her bedside stood her father, whom she loved as dearly as her life. That father had been a dearly as her life. That father had been a rejecter of Christianity, and he had sought to train and influence the mind of his child in his own belief. As the tide of life ebbed low, and she realized that her time to die was near at hand, she turned to her father and said, "Father, in whose religion shall I die, in yours or in my mothers?" The stubborn hearted infidel said, between his sobs, "In your mother's, my child, in your mother's." In all seriousness, truth and love, I must say that it is sail beyond all utterance that anyone possessed of a true Christian wife can live on year after year and make no ac-knowledgement of his obligations to his Heavenly Father. That is a model couple indeed where the sweet harmony of the gospel reigns in the heart of each member. There is no sight on earth so beautiful as the Christian family, where the father is priest and the mother priestess, and the sons and daughters as olive plants about the altar of God. In the great majority of cases where this is true of the parents it will be also true of the children. This couple were not simply religious in the ordinary sense—they were more than that. "They were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." Walking in the commandments implies a daily application of them to the moval ethics of their life. to the fashioning of their temper and deport-ment and the keeping of the ordinances of the Lord, expresses their obedience to those divine institutions which they were required to observe. They were evidently no time-serving, compromising, expediency professors of religion. They were pious in their tome and regulated their home life by the known law of the Lord, and they had a high regard for the service and claims of his house and worship. They ministered in the temple.

I do not know anything that society needs I do not know anything that society needs, and the churches needs, and the kingdom of God noeds, and the world needs just now more than they need the multiplication by the hundreds in every community of couples who shall aspire to be models along the line I have been speaking. It is to such people more than to all else that society owes the preservation of its integrity and purity. A community of totally Godless couples can do nothing to elevate human society. Oh, yes; I know that they may have ciety. Oh, yes; I know that they may have wealth and culture and social influence and education, and all that, and much more. But if you want to see what such people can do for human society, who have not the purify-ing, softening, uplifting power of the gospet of Christ, turn to the history of Greece and Rome, just before the Christian era. They reached the highest type of heathen civiliza-tion known to the world on the heathen phil-osophy, but as you gaze upon the inner life of osophy, but as you gaze upon the inner life of Greece and Rome in that climax of heathen culture, you draw back in horror.

Again, The model couple honor each other. The man is always saying to himself, in effect, this: "Likewise ye husbands live with them according to knowledge, giving honor unto the wife as unto the weaker vessel." He feels that he is to honor hor not because the is weak but being work her, not because she is weak, but being weak, she so well fills her place and acts her part. There is no sight more beautiful than to observe the honor a true husband bestows upon the wife of his bosom. She occupies the first place in his heart, first in his home, first in his society. He is ever ready to say: "In thee, my choice, I do rejoice; in thee I find content of mind. God's ampointment is my content of mind. God's appointment is my contentment."

Dr. Landels tells of a husband in whose Dr. Landels tells of a husband in whose home he was a frequent guest. He says: "The thing that impressed me most was the way this husband honored his wife. One could not be in his presence without feeling it. Never a word escaped his lips which reflected directly or indirectly on her. Never an action he performed would have led to the impression that there could be any difference between them. She was the queen of his retween them. She was the queen of his home. All about them felt that in his estimation and by his desire her authority was un-impeachable, and the effect of his example was such that the children, and friends, and domestics allie hedged her about with a sweet respect. A man of strong will himself, vet his was never known to be in collision with hers, and without any undue yielding, the homage which he paid his wife made their union one of the happiest it has ever been my privilege to witness."

On the other hand, the wife of the model ouple is living in that attitude which says: Let the the wife see that she reverences her "Let the the wife see that she reverences her husband." I believe it is a joy to most wives to do this, and it is to them a pang of living death, when, through an immoral life, the husband forfeits his place of honor in her heart. The honor a wife can pay her husband is becautifully illustrated in the case of Mrs. Hawthorne One wintry day Hawthorne received at the custom house in Salem, of which he was the surveyor, notice of his being removed from office. He went home dejected. She saw something was the matter, and with true wifely instinct she waited for him to break the silence. Finally he faltered out, "I am removed from office, what shall we do!" Did she look gloomy! Did she uporaid him! Did she sit helpless in a chair and say, "what are we going to do you have lost your place!" No; she left the room and presently returned, bringing fuel, and with her own fair hands kindled a cheery fire in the open hearth. Then she got pen, paper and ink and placed them on the table beside him. Then she touched the despondent man on the shoulder I believe it is a joy to most wives touched the despondent man on the shoulder

as he sat brooding and looking into the fire. He looked up into her beaming face. "Now," said she, "you can write your book; I san glad you have the chance." His gloom was gone. He sat to work, and the "Scariet Letter" was the result. It was a great success and rewarded them both.

Did you ever see a great ship in the distance, with sails all reefed, and yet in some mysterious way it seemed to be moving rapidly a long! You could not understand it till by and by, as you came nearer, you saw that on the other side of the great ship was a litthe steam tug conveying it into port. Even so it is the honor which a true wife bestows upon her husband that gives him motive power in many an hour of need. When we see some great man riding into success and fame let us remember the little steam tug of the devoted wife that is helping to pull him

There is something touching and grand in There is something touching and grand in the account Dr. Coubett gives of his honor for his wife. They lived in Philadelphia. It was midsummer. His wife was saffering from want of sleep. The dogs barked incessantly and she could not sleep—their howlings disturbed her. About 9 o'clock in the evening she said: "I think I could go to leave the country of the dogs." Down the evening she said: "I think I could go to sleep now if it were not for the dogs." Down the stairs Cobbett posted in shirt and trowsers and bare feet. Going to a heap of stones he started to work upon the dogs. He thus pelted them through the whole night and kept them several hundred yards from his home. His wife slept. At 8 o'clock in the morning he came into the house and made his tollet and went off to his work, which was to end at 6, happy that he had by all night's work purchased blessed rest for the wife of his bosom. chased blessed rest for the wife of his bosom I wonder how many husbands listening to me tonight would do so grand a thing for their

Again, the model couple are constantly renewing the old love. They remember love, like a flame, must have fuel to upon. Their love-making did not end with the courtship and marriage, but the flame of their love burns stronger with each year, be cause they furnish a plentiful supply of fuel. He is as gallant as he used to be in the days before their plighted troth; she is as careful to be as winning as she was when she waited for her lover at the door in the evening hour. Why should it not be so! To keep love is of greater importance than to win it. Indeed, love is to married life what wind and water and sail and pilot and rudder are to a ship. Some couples, simply for tack of this, seem to have lost their way.

If I were asked to suggest the organization of a new society it would be one for married people. There should be but two articles to the constitution. The first article would demand that those "entering the society should solemnly covenant that throughout married life they would carefully observe all those courtesies, unselfish attentions and loving kindnesses that they indulged in in the courting period." The second article should be that "neither member of the firm should be that "neither member of the firm should allow any criticism of the other from father, mother, relatives, or any one else in the world." Let me urge upon the husbands and wives to indulge in a little retrospective view this night. Are you drifting apart! Have you unconsciously fallen into things that are slowly but surely separating your affections and alienating love and marring your harmony and blessedness ! I her of you your harmony and blessedness! I beg of you to carefully consider and retrace your steps. Go back to the old love steps. Go back to the old love appologize to each other for past neglects, and brighten up your old flame. Open the family bible and look at the record of the marriage day. Bring out the little keepsakes of the courting days. Hunt up the old letters and read them over again. I see a bit of faded flower fall out of one of those letters as you open it. Take it up and press it to you heart again. I trust its faded condition wi not be the symbol of your love, but that the fragrance that abides with it still shall more fitly symbolize the love that you still cherish in your hearts for each other. If a blast from hell blew out the flame of your love, a blast from heaven will fan it into life once more. Let the wife begin to practice those pretty wiles she used to exercise in order to seem fair in his eyes in the days of love's young dream. Double your charm and try to make home to him the sweetest place on earth. Let the husband not only love his wife, but let him tell her so as he did in other days, and tell her so often, and yield to her not once, but twice and thrice and many times in unselfish devotion. Remember that the secret of a vigorous love is demonstrative affection. Go back and plan little pleasures for her as you used to do. Show her that you think about her and do not get absorbed in yourself or your business as you have been doing for a long while. Probably that wife's heart is just dying for a little love. You say, "O, she knows I love her." Yes, but she wants you to tell her as you should. A declaration made ten years ago will not suffice for today. She wants it fresh from your heart as a made ten years ago will not suffice for today.

She wants it fresh from your heart as a flower in the morning sun. Do it, and do it this very night. Tell her that she is the dearest in your eyes of all the women that that walk the earth. George Elliott says a very true thing when she declared that every marriage is a relation either of sympathy or of conquest. You want your way and the wife wants her way, and neither is willing to compromise. In the mean time your love is dying. Pat was one day asked why it was that he and his wife were always disagreeing. He replied, "Because we are both of one mind. She wants to be master, and so do I." As another has said, "I think I could show you homes where poverty has never left its pinch, where sickness has not paid its visits, where there is plenty of food and health, and yet where there is a skeleton and neither is willing to compromise. In the and health, and yet where there is a skeleton which haunts the home, more terrible than poverty or death. Why do the wife's shoulders droop so untimely! Why does she look old, and yet she is scarce thirty! She heaves a sigh of relief when her husband goes out to his work. She dreads his coming home. But he is not a drunkard. Listen to her soliloquy: Is this his Canan I was promised when I married! Our walks amid fields and flowers were all all too short. His whispers were all so loving, and the pressure of his hand so fond. I believed him. I surrendered hand so fond. I believed him. I surrendered to him youth, beauty, love, freedom—all a woman has to give, but now ali I receive in return is harsh tones, cold looks, stearn words, short answers and sullen reserves. You say, is that all! Yes; but that is a mountain of polar ice to put on a woman's heart. Husband, listen to me. That wife of yours is wretched, because you are a liar, because you perjured yourself when you vowed to love, cherish and comfort her till death do you part. You are a coward withall. The fear of the gallows keeps you from knocking out her brains with a poker, and yet you poison her life by a slow crucity and by an eath daily ignored. May God awaken you. Stop where you are and go back and begin over.

I pray God that each couple there may be a model couple, may be a blessing to society and the world, and to the kingdom of God en earth, and that they may be a part of the heavenly throng when when Jesus Christ
