THE BOSTON STORE,

114 S. 16th street. The Storz & Her's Brewery. One of the best breweries in Nebraska s that of Messrs. Storz & Her in this city. The capacity of the brewery is many thousands of barrels of beer per year. The beer has secured a wide and increasing popularity with dealers and consumers, as its purity, flavor and health giving properties are recognized everywhere as good. Only the finest hops and malt are used, and in the pro-cess of production the full strength of constituent element is extracted and resolved into a union that has found great favor with connoisseurs. Skilled men, who thoroughly understand their business are employed and the greatest pains are taken in every detail of the work, the lates and best methods yed and such principles applied in the brewing department as long experience and scientific research have commanded and approved. The policy of this famous reliable brewery has ever been to furnish the best in quality, wholesomeness and general excellency Dr. Heilmann, an expert in analytical chemistry, who analyzed the VIENNA EXPORT BEER a short time ago, says that this beer is FREE OF ALL DE-LITERIOUS SUBSTANCES, and in quality, flavor and strength superior to all imported beers in the city of Omaha,

Hayden Bros.

A Fox Terrier Who Travels all Over the Fast. Owney, the famous postal car dog. reached Norwich, Conn., for the first ime in his long travel, says the New York Sun. After the mail train from Palmer, Mass., had reached the station of the New Loudon & Northern railroad in Norwich at 10:45 o'clock, and Henry Kelley, the veteran mail carrier, had backed his wagon up to the postal car, a dark gray fox terrier leaped from the car, following the first pouch that was tossed into the vehicle. Mr. Kelley was amazed and slightly frightened at the act, but the mail agent reassured him: "Don't get skeared, Henry, it's only the postal car dog. Owney, aboard at Palmer; came in on the mail train over the Boston & Albany from Albany. Just take him along to the postoffice and send him up the Norwich & Worcester road by the next mail. It was not at all difficult to take Owney to the postoffice, for he wouldn't quit his perch on the mound of mail pounches. As soon as the pouches were ossed out on the sidewalk at the office he followed them, and went with them into the postoffice. Postmaster Caruthers and all the postal clerks as soon as they heard of the dog's history made much of him, petted and fed him, and he was taken about town to places of interest. He manifested extreme reluctance to go far from the postoffice, however, and was back there in time to escort the next mail train to the depot of the Norwich & Worcester railroad. went north on the 2 o'clock train in the postal car, sitting on a pile of pouches and there was plenty of applause for him from people on the station platform.

Owney belongs in Albany, and for several years has been traveling in Uncle Sam's postal cars in the middle and eastern states, evidently keeping a sharp eye on the management of the postal business. He has traveled many thousand miles, always in the postal cars is known to every postal agent in the the east, and apparently is guided by caprice by selecting and quitting a route No one interferes with his business, and he is passed along from one agent to another. He is supposed to be on his way to Boston now, and thence may take the back track for Albany. He wears a wide, handsome collar, on which is inscribed his name. He has the right of way everywhere. For the past three or four months he has been missing, and postal agents in all parts of New England and New York state frequently asked each other, "Any news from Owney yet?" It has just been learned that he was inspecting the postal routes of Canada during his absence. He was recently in a bad railway smashup and lost one of his eyes.

Thrilled by Music.

The cry was "On to Richmond!" in the early spring of 1862, and the Army of the Potomac separated, says the New York Press. Some were sent to Fort Monroe and other points south. The German division went down through the Shenandeah, Sumner in command at first, then Fremont and afterwards Sigel. I was with the latter, and many and many a long and wearisome murch we Finally one day we came to a branch of the Shenandoah. There were no pontoons, and we waded across, the water up to our shoulders. We kept marching along, our wet clothing catching and retaining the dust. We were just about getting dry when we struck the same river and waded it again, to our exceeding discomfort.

Later on the same day we we sickened with the sight of another turn of the river. The Thirty-ninth regi-ment, New York volunteers, were in advance when the order was given to wade across. They kicked and refused, and, the rear coming up, a block ensued. A musician of the Thirty ninth, an E flat cornet player, who was one of the jolliest men I ever knew, made a rush for the river, waded up until the water reached nearly to his armpits and began playing an exquisite waltz. The sight of that fellow playing under such circumstances was so comical that the soldiers, forgetting all discomforts, cheered him, and when he had finished followed him with a rush, and the division camped on the other side for the

THE GILA MONSTER AS IT IS A University Expert Finds Many of the Stories of the Reptile Myths. S. Gorman, who is in charge of original researches concerning batrachians and reptiles at Harvard university, has just issued a monograph on "The Gila Monster." This reptile, known to science as Heloderma suspretum, is an enormous lizard, and it has been a frequent topic of travelers' tales, who have credited it with a maximum length of thirty inches, the thickness of a strong man's hand, a poisonous black vapor breath, and bite usually fatal. Mr. Gorman has had a specimen under daily observation for over a year. It is about twelve inches long and three inches broad, striped black and white on a yellowish background. He finds the poisonous black vapor breath a myth. Although large worms and insects seemed to die much more quickly when bitten by the monster than when cut in pieces by the scissors, a kitten which the reptile had bitten twice suffered no symptoms other than those following any similar incised wound, and a post mortem, soon after the second bite, disclosed no indications of poison. Mr. Gorman, therefore, concludes that the venomous reputation of the Heloderma is unmerited, and that his black breath is imaginary. He is an interest-ing subject for study, but no more harmful than other animals of his size and weapons.

Real Amazons. Among the numerous army of veter-shouldering their guns, with belts girded to their loins, marched, keeping time to the drums, and showing by their bearing and demeanor as much discipline as the best soldier, says El Mensaero de Salvador. It cannot be denied that Salvador, as far as the defense and the preservation of its rights is concerned, stands among the first nations of America, since frail woman though strong in these cases, volunteers willingly to go into the battlefield, not only to be of use in lending succor to her wounded husband or son who fight for their rights but also to their country by shouldering a rifle and firing on the enemy's cartridges, which by nature she would fear to touch. There, we say, must exist great love of country, profound patriotism and great zeal for liberty and independence for their fath-
