A St. Bernard dog at Holdredge attacked and badly lacerated an old lady named Mrs. Norlin. She was insensible for some time, but is now recovering.

Fremont boasts of having had as a visitor the only man in the world whe could touch the end of his nose with the point of his el-bow. His name is Lee and he was only enabled to accomplish the feat by having a part of the bone of his left arm removed.

A strange and savage battle occurred at the farm of William Dommer on Spring Branch, three miles north of the city, says the Norfalk News. One of his dogs espied two little animals on the bank of the creek and after watching them awhile caught and killed both. Mr. Dog after examining them closely decided that he had captured two young otters, and before he had finished figuring what the hides were worth the old otter appeared on the scene and immediately tackled the canine, whose cries soon brought his mate. But the otter was too much for thom, and in exactly three minutes by the watch had one dead dog stretched forth on the sand and the other fleeing for his life and yelling with the pain of his wounds. It was, however, a temporary victory for the otter, for a man soon dispatched the animal with a club and pitch fork. The otter was an exceptionally large specimen, measuring more than three feet. Morse was frightened half to death by the ravings and outbreaks of a young man named Frank Dish, who recently came to this coun-try from Bohemia. He went crazy, and went earing along through woods and fields, bare-leaded and barefooted. When he got to Oasis he was corralled and taken to Iowa City. The wife of Peter Croughan, a mechanic tried to commit suicide at Cedar Rapids by jumping off May's island into Cedar river.

Her husband was near and jumping in saved her. She narrowly escaped drowning, having got into water up to her neck. The couple have not lived pleasantly, and she was subject to fits which unbalanced her mind. A verdict for $1,000 damages was rendered by a jury in the case of Owen Hughes vs. the Diagonal railroad company at Marshalltown. While drawing across the track last September Hughes was run into by the train, being thrown some distance and sustaining quite painful injuries. His wagon was demolished. The award was made on the ground that the railroad crossing was defective. The company will appeal.
