As soon as the contract for paving Twenty-ourth street was awarded to the California Petroleum and Asphalt company, Deputy Sheriff Henry Grebe presented himself and served an injunction on the mayor and mem-bers of the council restraining them from entering into the contract. Councilmen Walters and Haley made some very pointed remarks in regard to the injunc tion business, and their sontiments were very well received by the lobby and mem-bers. Walters said that the Barber asphaltum company was the instigators of the in-junction, and he scored them thoroughly. He said "the very men who had served the in-junction were those who were the prime movers and circulated the petition for asphaltum, and now they turn around and en-join the council from entering into a contract which was legally lot to the lowest bidder. It was a mean trick, and they ought not to have a cent for paving Twenty-fourth street."

REWARDED AT LAST.

A Story of Self Sacrifice and Unkept Promises.

Away down in the Vermont hills in the town of Brattleboro is a faded little woman who looks today upon the world with eyes in which there is a light quite new and strange to them. After long seeking she has found justice and a re-ward for services well and faithfully performed.

Like many another story, says the Chicago Herald, this one is traced from the end backward, but when straightened out and arranged in tellable form it is something like this:

When Chicago was very young-in 1858-there came here a young man named Elijah S. Alexander. He came from Brattleboro, Vt., where he left a father and mother and a sister in her teens. Elijah prospered in Chicago and accumulated considerable property. Meanwhile, his sister Serotia had pur-sued the study of music and had educated herself as a teacher thereof. After several years she went to Boston and established herself there as a music teacher. She was talented, young, beautiful, and life in the metropolis seemed much fairer than in her poor paternal home. She found a fruitful field in her profession and was soon earning between $1,000 and $1,500 a year. Just as she found herself afloat on prosperity's sea a telegram from home called her to the bedside of her mother, who was thought to be dying. Elijah was also called from Chicago. This was in 1865. The illness of Mrs. Alexander however, was not fatal. She recovered from it, but was an invalid. Before re-bank deposit-due only on demand. It had never been demanded; therefore it was not due and could not have expired by limitation. He took the case into court in 1887. In 1888 before Judge Clifford he obtained a verdict for $30,000. The estate fought it and took an appeal. The appellate court affirmed the judgment. It was then taken to the supreme court and after a year it was there affirmed. Then a petition for a rehearing was filed and after due t me refused. Thus was the last obstacle overcome and the other day the probate court ordered the payment of the claim.

On the 8th inst. Edwin Walker, administrator of the estate of Elijah S. Alexander, wrote a check for $30,533 and turned it over to Attorney Ashcraft, who deposited it in a bank and wired his client that her claim had been paid.

And this is why there is a new and strange light in the eyes of Serotin Alexander today. She may look back on the past and see in it only self-sacrifice and disappointment for herself, but she may look to the future for comfort for her parents and herself with the reflection that she fought a valiant fight and won.

turning to the west Elijah had a serious talk with his sister Serotia. He told her that he would like to have her remain at home and take care of the old folks. They would not live long, he said, but while they lived he would like to feel that they were lovingly attended.

It was hard to give up all that life on her own chosen lines meant to her. She saw the two sides of the shield clearly. One was golden and attracted her; the other was dull lead. But she saw her duty after much inward battling with the self, and with a grave face she an-nounced to her brother that she would accept his terms. She would renounce all her plans, her hopes, her prospects, and would take up her post with her parents and attend them while they lived.

Then Elijah came back to Chicago and went on piling up wealth. He married, too, and proceeded to live as he chose. The years went by and the old folks lived along feebly, but yet with a tenacious grasp on life. Serotia passed the mark of thirty years, but she was still beautiful and still had suitors. These she dismissed one after another, cleaving to her original pledge to remain with her parents while they lived.

At last she wavered. She grew very lonely. She saw her life fading and knew that she was not fulfilling her destiny. Her girl friends were happy wives and mothers and she was an old maid. She wavered and, being pressed to wed by a suitor who had loved ner through many years, she wrote Elijah that she thought she would marry. Elijah immediately went down to Brattleboro and talked her out of this selfish notion. It was clearly her duty, he said-now more than ever-to remain at her post. He implored her not to forsake her trust and promised-for he was now very rich-to give her $10,000 in addition to his original pledge.

would fix it up legally at once, he said. She yielded. Not because of the but because he had harped on noney. the string of filial duty, and this won her. She chilled her heart to love and sent her lover away. Then the old life went on and the years lengthened out and she faded and grew old.

At last-in 1885-Elijah died here in Chicago and the news was flashed to Serotia, who was still faithfully attending the old folks at home. When the estate-was settled up, however, it was found that no portion of the property had been left to his parents and no provision made for paying Serotia her just claim. The spirit of aggressiveness in the little old maid's heart awoke at this. She was nearly fifty years old. Over twenty years of her life had been succi-ficed to duty and a brother's piedge. She now meant to see if there was justice to CARTER'S Positively cured by these Little Pills. now meant to see if there was justice to be had for herself and her parents,

She consulted eminent Chicago iawyers, and one after another they told her that she could recover nothing. She had no contract, they said; and, besides, the statutes of limitations barred her claim. At last she found one. He said he thought he could recover; that the statute of limitations had nothing to do with the case; that the fund was like a prosecution of claims. In the matter of fees and charges THE BEE desires only to clear expenses. The bureau is intended for the relief of the people from the rapacity of legal sharks. In many cases fees allowed attorneys are irrevocably fixed by law, and in such the question is decided. In other claims such a charge will be made as seems to cover the actual expenses involved in collection

We make no effort to solicit your patronage, as does the ordinary agent who seeks your claim for a financia consideration. Such is not our purpose. We offer to one and all the services of a well equipped bureau, where a claim of any nature can be sent, or information in regard thereto be obtained. If your claim is worth less or illegitimate you will be so notified without fear or favor. If the claim is genuine it will receive prompt attention and efficient prosecution. If unsuccessful, no charge will be made; provided, however, that claimants must defray their own ex penses in the preparation of affidavits, depo-sitions, and other evidence outside of Wash-ington.
