A NEW SYSTEM.

Prof. DeLamorton's Dressmaking Academy. Tomorrow there will be opened in Omaha a branch of Prof. O. H. DeLamorton's famous school of scientific tailoring under the direction of Mme. M. J. Aberly. That his system is a good one, and to show the patentee's faith in his invention, a complete course of instruction will be given free for a few weeks to as many as will apply. The DeLamorton system is no humbug pasteboard chart, but is the compass, triangle and square combined in one small tool, the true French system simplified. Its merits cannot be described, but everybody recognizes its superior advantages at sight. To obtain a sight of their celebrated seamless dresses is well worth a visit to their establishment at rooms 304 to 319, third floor, N. Y. Life building.

An Old Story Retold. When General Charles H. Van Wyck of Nebraska was running for congress, many years ago, in the Fifteenth New York district, there was a certain Irishman who steadfastly refused to give the old soldier any encouragement. The colonel was greatly surprised, thereore, when Pat informed him, on election day, that he had concluded to support him. "Glad to hear it, glad to hear it,' said the colonel; "I rather thought you were against me, Patrick." "Well, sir," said Patrick, "I wuz; and whin ye stud by me pig pen and talked that day fur two hours or worse, ye didn't budge me a hair's breadth, sir; but after ye wuz gone I got to thinking how ye reached yer hand over the fence and scratched the pig on the back till he laid down wid the pleasure of it, and Everything being then in readiness, the word was given, and "Hats off" went clicking over the wires to the waiting crowds at New York, Philadelphia, San Francisco, and all the principal cities. To describe the view from that roof were indeed a hopeless task.

were major generals and twelve were brigadier generals, and field officers are numbered by the score. The history of these men is the history of the war. Wouldn't a history of the war by living major generals, each one contributing ten pages, be a marketable book? I was the other day told a story about a member of the present congress whom I will call James Smith, by one of his colleagues whom, also, I cannot identify, says the correspondent. They are from one of the border states and live near the line.

"Enlistments," says the member, "were secretly going on in their neigh-borhood for both armies. Jim was an orator, rather than a soldier. He never tired of addressing public meetings. But he was excitable and apt to be with the crowd at the moment. One day he yelled for the old flag and the undivided union, and the next day he helped hang John Brown and Abraham Lincoln in effigy. "One morning when Jim was in town

he was called on to harangue a hundred or two men who were assembled in front of the corner grocery listening to the latest news. He climbed into a wagon, threw off his cont and sailed in.
"I have but one message for you," he shouted, 'go to the front! Many of your neighbors are on the line of battle and all calling unto you! Why stand ye here idle? Freedom, which shricked when Kosciusko fell, is in peril as never before. Fly to her rescue! Men may cry peace, peace, but there is no peace! Freedom's battle, when once begun, bequeathed from bleeding sire to son, though baffled oft, is ever won. Rally and organize a company right here-

"Either! either!' shouted Jim. 'Can't all think alike."

"It made some fun at the time," said Mr. M. C., who was in the confederate army afterward, "but I'll be hanged if I wasn't talking to Jim about it the other day, and he insists that he was just

At least two of the present senators who were major generals enlisted in the army as private soldiers-Gibson of Louisiana and Hawley of Connecticut. These men, both fine looking, have a curious resemblance and are sometimes mistaken for each other. Both, too, as their rapid promotion indicates, had a romantic story. Hawley, an old abolitionist, was the first man to enlist in his state, and was in the army all the time to Appoint to Appoint wards. The testimony of people who have been shot differs widely as to how it feels. I have heard more than a dozen members of the present congress talk on the subject and have got as many opinions. The worst shot man now in public life is probably General Oates, who resented the insolence of the misrepresentative of the "Federation" the other day. He lost his right arm in front of Richmond in his twenty-seventh battle, having previously been shot through the right arm, then in the right leg, then in the left him, then through the right thigh, then in the head, as premonitory symptoms of what was coming.

"When a minie ball strikes you," said, "it stuns you as if you had been hit at short range with a club or brickbat. Then the develish intruder gradually becomes hotter and hotter, as if you had turned into a furnace of live coals. Then perhaps you mercifully drop into unconsciousness." "It felt when I was hit," said Colonel Herbert of Alabama, speaking of the matter to a comrade, 'as if my shoulder was seared with caustic; in fact, I never could get over the impression that the Yanks were firing red hot balls." He experimented with four of them during his service, and has reason to know just how they feel.

The two one-legged men in congress who manage themselves best in walking are, by general consent, Senator Daniel of Virginia, and Representative David B. Henderson of Iowa. They were both very young meu when they met with the loss of a leg, and as Amos Cunning ham says, "they probably hadn't got attached to it." A stranger would scarcely suspect either men of using a wooden member.

"When I was hit in the head," says Colonel Henderson, "it didn't hurt much, for I became unconscious; but when my foot intercepted the spiral flight of the rifle bullet, it seemed as if I had experienced an equal collision with Jupiter, or, at least, one of the wildest and most dissolute comets. I never was so astonished in my life. Then came collapse." Joe Cannon, "the next member from the Fifteenth district of illinois," as he would probably sign his name today if he were less modest, tells a good story of Henderson: 'I had seen Dave Henderson around on crutches, and I was sorry for him, and urged him to come and see us dance at one of our little affairs at the National Well, do you know, he came. Without a crutch? Yes. And he came tripping and bowing in as if he had never had even a corn, and he waltzed his cork leg with a patent leather boot on it up to one of my favorite partners, and bore her off in the giddy labyrinths of the german, just as if he had half a dozen legs. Yes, sir, as lively as if he was a centipede."

And those who saw it say that the prize wattzer of Danville leaned against the piano paralyzed, superseded as belle of the ball by the more or less disjointed

but very vivacious David. "How much it hurts to be shot," said Senator Manderson, who got several mementoes of that sort during the war, and likes to exchange views with veterans, "depends on where and how you are hit. If it is in an extremity, or in thick flesh, the wound is not generally very painful at once, and men have often been so struck, and even maimed, without knowing it. But got hit along that vital center, the spine, and you feel as f a red-hot spear a mile long had been thrust through you.

I asked Colonel Stone, the Kentucke soldier, who is generally seen on crutches. "I didn't know, at first, that I was wounded," he said. "I just felt a slight twitch at my trouser leg as if a brier had caught it or a playful kitten had touched it with her claw, but pretty soon I fell in the grass and lay there all day and all night while Morgan and the rest of the boys marched away into
