J. B. Matthews, a farmer living east of the city, left his horse and wagon hitched in front of Neumayer's hotel yesterday afternoon and went inside. When he returned he found that some one had nipped a fine new suit of clothes from the wagon and disappeared. There is no clew.

Samuel Barr, an old citizen, found Dr. McCarty's pocketbook a day or two ago in one of the local depots and returned it to its owner. Worked Her for Her Money.

A white woman with an affectionate turn of mind called at the police station last evening with a long tale of woe to unfold. She failed to give her name or residence, but said that she had become infatuated with the winning ways of Sam Glover, a colored man who has been in the employ of Mace Wise, the liveryman. Sam had so far won his way into her graces as to induce her to promise to marry him and to send him $140 in cash as a guarantee of good faith. After sending him the money she packed up her household goods and shipped them to Council Bluffs over the Northwestern railway. When she arrived yesterday she found that her dusky lover had left the city by the back staircase, and that she was in the soup so far as her admirer and her dash subsidy were concerned. She wanted every policeman in the city to appoint himself a committee of one to look for Glover, and held the hands of Officers Leach and Martin several minutes while using her most persuasive tones. Glover has not turned up.

NEWS FROM COUNCIL BLUFFS

Independents Determined Not to Fuse with the Democrats.

HOW EDITOR TRAVIS GOT INTO TROUBLE

He Makes an Effort to Secure Alliance Votes for the Democratic Candidate for the Judge of the District Court.

E. Pardee Travis, a member of the people's party, is just now the object of a hurricane of wrath from the members of his party. Mr. Travis, as may not be generally known, is the editor of the Pottawattamie Chief, a small weekly paper which has until recently been published in Avoca, but which was moved to Council Bluffs last week through the influence of Fremont Benjamin, the democratic candidate for judge of the district court, in order that the paper might exert a wider influence in the west end of the county, where Benjamin hopes to gain most of his votes. The first thing Mr. Travis did after getting his printers' towel hung up and his office cat safely stowed away in the waste basket, was to sit down and write an editorial in which he attributed to Mr. Benjamin all the graces and excellences which are usually ascribed to divinity alone, and asked all members of the people's party to vote for Mr. Benjamin, notwithstanding the fact that the people's party had a candidate of their own for the office of district judge. His object in asking them to do this was to put an end to what he considered the corrupt political ring composed of Judges Thornell, Macy, Deemer and Smith.

But Mr. Travis' two-column prayer for the purity of the bench did not have altogether the desired effect, for some of the local party leaders thought they knew a thing or two about judicial purity themselves. Accordingly the first thing they did after they had heard of the appearance of the article in question was to get together and resolve in a way that is calculated to fill Mr. Travis' head with fears for its safety. A special meeting of the People's Party club was called and resolutions were passed substantially as follows:

Whereas, The editor of the Pottawattamie Chief has published an article assuming to dictate to the members of the people's party of this city and the Fifteenth judicial district that they should vote for Fremont Benjamin, the democratic nominee, without the approval of the members of the said party, therefore be it

Resolved, That we rebel against such endeavors on the part of the editor of the Chief to deliver us into the hands of our enemies, when in convention our delegates refused to endorse Fremont Benjamin or in any other way than with either the democratic or republican parties, and be it

Resolved, That we condemn and censure the action of Editor Travis in urging us to repudiate the principles adopted at the Omaha and our state judicial convention.

They further resolved to demand of the editor of the Chief that he publish the resolutions in the next issue of his paper in order that his subscribers may know the feelings of the true and blue members of the party. The resolutions were signed by L. Kinnehan, J. P. Stapleton, George McPeek, W. A. Pool and C. L. Gillette.

Fire Broadway and Corner of Benton Street.

Our late loss by fire was covered by two policies, both in the COUNCIL BLUFFS INSURANCE COMPANY.

By 7 o'clock the next morning after the fire the secretary was on the ash heap, pencil in hand, ready to figure the loss down to bedrock, which he did, too, saying that it was his duty and no small part of his business." So long as he did not go below bedrock we had no reason to complain, consequently the settlement was not only prompt, but in every way satisfactory, so much so that in addition to $9,200.00 (seven policies) carried by this company before the fire we now add to it $16,000.00.

Being intimately acquainted with the secretary and directors we cannot be persuaded that better indemnity can be obtained than that offered by our home company, besides we believe in patronizing worthy home enterprises, everything being equal, and unless we do we shall continue to be dependent on foreign capital and corporations.

The Broken Rail.

By E. Munson, from Shoat Stories for November: The conductor runs up the loose sidewalk and knocks at the section house door. The wind booms solemnly in the black tree tops, and from the waiting engine comes the steady clank, clank of the air pump.

The half-clad section boss appears at the door.

"Broken rail half mile west of Owl creek trestle; must be fixed 'fore No. 3 can pass."

Without awaiting a reply the conductor is gone and the train labors onward up the grade.

The "gang" is roused, the hand car carries them quickly down to Owl creek, the broken rail is repaired and all is ready for the toilsome return journey.

Slowly the car is forced up the winding grade. The men work silently—now cowering as if to avoid a blow as the car plunges into the inky darkness of a cut, now shrinking involuntarily from the verge of chasms heaped up with vapory blackness. Occasionally against the starry pall of the sky a wan shimmer reveals the Sierra's snowy shroud and a cold wind pouring down from those dead heights sways the sable plumes of fir and tamarack and booms in the tall pine tops.

Unnoticed by the men on the car a rumble heavier than the murmur of the wind comes down the canyon. A shudder runs along the heavy steel rails as with the roar of an avalanche a locomotive sweeps round the point just ahead.

For a second, like a picture thrown upon a screen, the handcar, with its freight of terror-stricken men, stands out in the glare of the headlight against the surrounding darkness, and death was upon them.

With brake-shoes spitting fire the train rushes past, the red lights of the caboose swing around the curve below, and a sudden hush falls upon the scene. Below the grade fragments of rocks and loosened earth bound and rebound amid tree tops and jutting ledges, down, down. All is still at last, and up from the depths wells the sound of brawling waters, softened by distance to a murmer.

The wind from the height once more sways the sable plumes of fir and tamarack, and booms in the tall pine tops.

Neatly Done With the Lasso.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat: "The prettiest throw of the lasso I ever saw was down in New Mexico last summer," said D. C. Smith, a western cattleman. "I had gone out to look at a bunch of cattle I thought of buying and was standing in front of the owner's house discussing the proposed trade. A 2-year-old child was playing about the lawn when suddenly it clasped its hands and cried out as though highly elated. I turned my head and saw to my horror that it was amusing itself with a monster rattlesnake that had just coiled to strike. It was shooting its forked tongue out almost into the face of the child, and it was this action which so pleased the little one. At my side stood a Mexican cowboy with a lasso on his arm. Quick as a flash it went whizzing through the air and closed around the neck of the serpent just as it drew its head back for the fatal stroke. The father of the child nodded his head, remarked that it was a capital throw, and resumed our discussion with imperturbable gravity. Your Mexican is nothing if not stoical. It is the result of his Indian blood."

Precious Metals in the Sea.

The investigations formerly carried on by chemists with a view to extracting the precious metals from sea water have lately been revived by Herr Munster, a Scandinavian. In this pursuit, sea water was taken by him from Cristiania fjord, 100 liters being evaporated to dryness, giving 1,830 grams of residue. This was ground and divided into portions of 300 grams, each of which was mixed with 100 grams of litharge, 100 of pure potassium-sodium carbonate and four of carbon from starch, and the silver and gold determined; the result being nineteen milligrams of silver and six of gold per ton of average sea water. Considering these extremely small amounts of the precious metals, Herr Munster is of the opinion that no method of precipitation in tanks can possibly be successful, believing rather, that the precipitation must be effected by the sea itself, where the water is continuously renewed by a natural current, and he points out that the copper sheathing of vessels has long been known to precipitate silver under these circumstances.

The Gun Not Needed.

A certain doctor in northern Maine, says the Lewiston Journal, is noted for his love of hunting, and he is reckoned a pretty good shot. During an epidemic not long ago a well known lumberman (now deceased) had the misfortune to have several of his men quite sick, and one of them being in a dangerous condition, the lumberman started in haste for this doctor. Now our medical friend is sometimes quite slow in getting ready for his trips, and on this occasion, after being called he was unusually so. Suddenly the thought came to him that as he was to go so far into the woods he might see some game, and stepping to the door where the nervous lumberman was impatiently waiting, he inquired, "Say, don't you think I better take my gun along?" "Gun? no!" was the excited reply, "the man will be dead enough before you can get there."

Nothing could be handsomer than the empire and directoire long coats and cloaks made ready for winter wear. Some are of cloth, others of Russian velours and the richest of plain and ribbed velvet in combination.

RULES FOR CUPID'S CAPTIVES

A Discourse on the Etiquette of Engagements and Weddings.

DIETARY TIPS FOR THE CORPULENT

Regimen for the Reduction of Surplus Flesh—A Noted Woman Astronomer—Gossip Notes and the Latest Capers of Fashion.

The etiquette of engagements and weddings is a topic of universal interest and is thus set forth by Harper's Bazar:

The engagement ring is worn upon the same finger as the wedding ring, and after marriage is worn as a guard to it. The solitaire diamond is always a favorite, but the range of styles and prices is wide and the girl's fancy and the youth's purse may combine to make any ring proper.

As to wedding rings, the "square" and "round" ones have each their likers. A wedding ring with sharp cut edges fits snugly, but being worn constantly will in time make a callous spot at the base of the finger, which is anything but beautiful. A ring will all round edges renders this impossible and is more comfortable to wear, giving with every motion of the finger.

In this country there is a pleasant freedom allowed the engaged lovers. They ride, drive or walk together unquestioned. Her engagement is one of the most charming experiences of a girl's life, and she is wise who will not let it be cut too short. The length of an engagement must depend mostly upon outward circumstances. It is only a journey of which the end must come sooner or later. A month or six weeks is not too short if such a time is found best, and there are couples who have waited seven years to see their hopes realized.

The bride, whose verdict is supposed to decide everything, settles the wedding day, and begins to arrange for it. No one hour is more fashionable than another for a wedding. Many large weddings are arranged for the evening this fall. On the other hand many people prefer the English custom of a morning wedding. An ancient English law forbade the solemnization of marriage after noon, and the tradition is still kept up among English brides.

If a wedding entertainment is to be given it immediately follows the marriage ceremony, which may take place either at church or at home; quite privately or in the presence of numerous friends, who are also invited to the entertainment. The bride's parents, guardians or friends representing them, issue the invitations and give the entertainment. The bride cannot properly do this in her own name. If she has no parent or guardian, a friend may assume that place for the occasion. Wedding cards are sent out two weeks previous to the event. The invitation may read:

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM WILDE
request the pleasure of your company at the marriage of their daughter,
ESTELLE FLORENCE
to
MR. JAMES FREDERICK HAITE,
on Thursday evening, October the sixth,
at half after seven o'clock.
1414 Fifth avenue. New York.

This invites to a marriage and entertainment.

Invitations may be sent to either marriage or entertainment separately. Invitations to a church ceremony may be sent to many friends, while a limited number are asked to the ensuing entertainment at home. This church invitation reads, "request the honor of your presence," or "request your presence," the name of the church being printed immediately below the date. Occasionally a card of admittance to the church is inclosed which reads, "Please present this card to the church," the name of church following.

To those so favored a card is inclosed, fitting the sheet on which "Mr. and Mrs. Wilde request the pleasure of your company at the wedding breakfast," or "the wedding reception," of their daughter, niece or granddaughter as the case may be.

Again, the marriage ceremony may be performed in the presence of only a few friends, in church or at home, and the invitation may simply "request the pleasure of your company at the wedding reception of their daughter," the hours "four to six" or "eight to ten" being added. In case of the invitation being issued by a temporary guardian, it may read, "The pleasure of your company is requested at the marriage of Miss Estelle Florence Wilde to Mr. James Frederick Haite," the title of the young lady being given in full.

If the bride is to give receptions after her marriage, a card of invitation to them cannot properly be concluded with an invitation to her marriage, which is issued before it. The reason is that at that time there is no "Mrs. James Frederick Haite," so she cannot invite anybody to anything. But an invitation to a bride's receptions may be included with an "announcement" of her marriage, which is a different matter. An announcement is sent out after a marriage has taken place.

Of all the letters which the oracle of the woman's column receives from the distressed damsels whose noses are not desirable, whose sweethearts do not quite suit, who want to know the color of Cleopatra's hair and the size of Helen of Troy's waist, Queen Victorias, family name and how to pronounce Gotterdammerung, who seek the propriety of kissing their lovers, and desire a remedy for freckles, those are most pathetic and most plenty asking, What shall we do to be thin? What shall we eat to grow fat? Indeed, it would seem, says the New York Sun, that one-half of the world was trying to reduce flesh, the other half to gain it. Why the Creator doesn't arrange a fairer average, instead of persisting in the absurd old theory that to her that hath flesh, more shall be given, and from her that hath not shall be taken away that which she hath, is one of the things which shakes our faith. Now, the stout women that haven't had a drink of water since they were forty, have starved themselves into indigestion, and walked until they were weary, only to grow stouter with the years, will be interested in the experience of an English lady who was suffering from some stomach trouble, and began a treatment of not water to relieve it, with no faith in its reducing her weight. This woman had an elder sister, who for years denied herself liquids, sweets, and all that makes eating a delight; had tried electricity, massage and inordinate walking, until she had established a deplorable state of chronic ill-health, only to grow heavier all the time. Accordingly, when the evil day dawned in which she herself could not hook her wedding girdle by several inches, and when indigestion, a most frequent cause of obesity, attacked her, she began a diet of minced rump steak and a slice of toast for breakfast, preceded by two cups of boiling hot water. At 11 o'clock two more cups of hot water. For lunch a couple of slices from the cold joint, more minced beef and more toast. Afternoon tea as usual, only more of it, with bread and butter and cake. For dinner, fish and meat, or game and biscuits with butter, but no soup or sweets. Two cups of hot water when going to bed. This dieting was pursued more or less erratically in the woman's way for six months, when, to her surprise, she found that she had reduced herself to her usual weight and figure. Then she ceased the hot water drinks, except at night, and in the morning relaxed the dietary regime whenever she was invited out, but took up her old amusements, even to the riding of a 4-year-old in a habit the same size as her daughter's, whose figure is not the least of her attractions.

Little girls' gowns quaintly reproduce the designs worn by their elders and are, oddly enough, fashioned of the same rich materials. A little frock of the popular and expensive velour brown, with an old-rose background, has a plain, scant little skirt cut on the cross and a short-waisted coat of velvet, lined with old-rose silk. The odd thing about the dress is the little sleeve, which is made of brown velvet, slashed from the shoulder to the elbow over the old-rose silk. A little round collar of fine lawn edged with real lace finishes the neck. One of the most discouraging things to buy for a child this season is a cloak, for all the desirable things are so very high. But now that the tartans are so much in vogue, a pretty coat of the bright checked material may be made by the mother gifted with a little knack of sewing, at comparatively small expense. Almost all the tartan coats are made full and straight, and have velvet puffs on the sleeves, and bold revers or a full frill of velvet outlining a yoke, which may be of the material or of the velvet, and is usually gathered like the skirt. For little girls past 5, the cloaks like the frocks are short, reaching but little below the knee.

Some of the most notable astronomical discoveries made in recent years have been made by a woman, and that woman, says Harper's Bazar, is Mrs. Mina Fleming of Harvard college observatory.

Mrs. Fleming is a native of Dundee, Scotland, where she received her education, and for five years taught in the public schools. For the past ten years she has been engaged in the examination of the photographs, computations and reductions of the astronomical work of the observatory at Harvard college.

She now has charge of a corps of nearly a dozen women computers. A large part of their work is the study of the spectra of the stars, which forms the memorial to the late Dr. Henry Draper. Mrs. Fleming examined and measured the 27,000 spectra of stars involved in the preparation of the Draper catalogue.

By a careful examination of the photographs taken at the Cambridge and Peruvian stations of the observatory she has discovered twenty-one new variable stars, the only variable stars discovered by any woman, and a larger number than have been found by any man. A curious class of stars exist whose spectra consist mainly of bright lines. Only forty-five of these have as yet been discovered, and of these Mrs. Fleming has found twenty-five. About 600 quarto pages of the Annals of the Observatory have been prepared in a great measure under her direction.

An enormous amount of ribbon is used this season, and we are assured that the end is not yet. A handsome skirt of silk is almost covered with inch-wide ribbons with tassels at the points. These ribbons extend the full length of the skirt, the tassels barely escaping the floor as the wearer moves about.

A Sick Head,

a faint feeling, a bad taste in the mouth, lack of appetite, despondency, irritability, all arise from a disordered stomach. A little Carlsbad Sprudel Salt will correct these troubles, and prevent them in the future. Be sure and secure only the genuine.
