OBJECT TO THE JUDGMENT

Alleged Sensation Developing in the Nebraska Stock Yard's Company.

SMALL STUCKHOLDERS ARE THREATENED

Litigation Said to Have Been Provoked with This Idea in View-Adjournment of the May Term of District Court.

LANCOLN, July 3 .- [Special to THE BEE.]-The May term of district court was finally adjourned sine die at 11 o'clock this morning, and a number of entries made in unimportant cases.

Saturday a judgment of $20,000 was entered in favor of C. A. Hanna and against the Nebraska Stock Yards company. Today J. S. Gregory comes into court with a long affidavit in which he insists that the interests of justice demand that the judgment be set aside, as he had a defense that will hold water in any court. The defense is that the notes sued on were paid long ago, and that this is simply an attempt to squeeze out the smaller fry in the stock yards company. Some interesting scraps are anticipated.

Mrs. James Ledwith and her brother-inlaw John had a little set-to before Judge Lansing this morning. John is executor of his deceased brother's estate, and his widow wants him removed because he refuses to pay over to her the $100 a month allowance provided in the will. John refuses to pay over the money because he says part of it is for the maintenance and education of the children and Mrs. James is extravagant and pays too much for their education. The decision was reserved.

Fourth of July Pardons.

Governor Crounse signed two Fourth of July pardons today. One is for George Hart, sent up from Hall county in March, 1882. Hart was sentenced to be hanged for murder and had his sentence commuted by Governor Dawes June 22, 1884. He is aged 35 years. The other is for Joseph Heraldsky, convicted of murder in the second degree Colfax county in October, 1881, and sentenced for life. He is 24 years old.

Heraldsky's crime was the killing of his wife and mother-in-law. He has been in the hospital for the past two years and is dying of consumption. Hart is the policeman who killed two men in Grand Island in 1881. -City in Brief,

Rev. C. B. Newman, pastor of the First Christian church, has resigned his pastorate and last evening preached his farewell sermon. He has been in ill health for some time, and preferred quitting before break-ing down completely. He will take a long rest and then locate at some point in Illinois. Katie Castiday, the girl whom J. J. Swartz was charged with criminally assaulting, fell nown a stairway at Twentieth and U streets this morning. The girl is subject to fits, and was taken with one as she started down the stairs. The fall deprived her of the power of speech, and therefore when the case came up in police court Swartz was discharged, the county attorney concluding that he didn't have enough evidence anyhow.

The Roadster club matinee promises to be

Miss Alice Eikenbarry of Plattsmouth arrived in the city this morning in quest of the services of an oculist. When she arose yesterday morning she was horrifled to discover that she had been stricken blind in one eye, although an examination disclosed no visible defect to the organ.

The following cases were entered in the supreme court today: James C. Brinkwater against Jonathan S. Grable et al, Gage county; City of Beatrice against Allen Leary, county; City of Beatrice against Allen Leary, Gage county, and Charles Vandeventer against State of Nebraska, Cass county.

Quite a number of Lincoln people were surprised to see C. W. Mosher on the streets of this city yesterday. Mr. Mosher came down from Omaha yesterday morning and returned last night at 11:05 over the Rock Island. The fact that Mr. Mosher was unattended by an officer is due to the $10,000 bond given by Mr. C. O. Whedon which still holds good.

FIRE AT ALLIANCE.

Beveral Buildings and Stocks of Goods Destroyed-Partially Insured. ALLIANCE, July 3. [Special Telegram to THE BEE.] - Fire started in the interior of the general merchandise store of C. W. Klingbeil this morning about 1 o'clock and the inside was a mass of flames when discovered. Nearly all of the stock was burned and the fire communicated to J. C. Waisner's building, occupied by Spencer Grifflith's second hand store, a blacksmith Grifflith's second hand store, a blacksmith shop, a small frame building and a stable. The store building was owned by R. A. Weston and the insurance had recently expired, but the rest of the losses are fairly well covered. The insurance companies carrying risks are: Connecticut, $1,000; Continental, $1,000; Hartford, $1,200; Phoenix, $1,200; Phoenix of Brooklyn, $5,000; Ætna of Hartford, $1,200; North British and Mercantile. $1,250; Sun of London, $1,250, and Springfield and Massachusetts, $1,250. The origin of the fire is unknown.

BEATRICE, July 3.—[Special Telegram to FEEBER.]—Although it was feared by many that today might witness runs on some of the banks, nothing of the kind happened.

The only item worthy of note in connection with the bank failures is the filing of deeds of transfer by John Ellis, president of the Nebraska National bank, to his son, Joseph Ellis, of large holdings of real estate in this county. Other officials of the bank also deeded some property to other parties than the bank.

you ought to get down into New Mexico

-well, they're hotter. "it begins to get hot before you strike the eastern Colorado line, and after you get into New Mexico it gets worse, and by the time you get to Rincon, N. M., you begin to conclude that Dante's Inferno was not all a

"After leaving Rincon the appearance of the country is quite deceiving. You think, maybe, it is hades, but it usn't. It is only the beginning of a stretch of territory in New Mexico and Arizona that is so hot and dry that the inhabitants find it difficult to dry that the inhabitants find it difficult to tell the truth. There was a soldier once (probably more than once) stationed at a post in southern Arizona, who died and was duly buried. About three days after his death, however, he astonished his comrades by appearing in the barracks one hot afternoon, shivering and with teeth chattering as if he had the ague. "'Hullo, Smith!' said a sergeant, 'where've you been?'

"'B-b-b-been in sheol an' I c-c-come b-back fer my b-b-blankets!'
"The inhabitants of the country tell this

"The inhabitants of the country tell this as a joke, but, somehow, it strikes the unacclimated person too forcibiy as having a good deal of possible truth in it.

"Seriously, however, there are worse climates than this, barring the dryness. If a few trees and a bit of grass could be sprinkled about the country would be quite bearable. Despite the intense heat of the sun one can always keep moderately cool in-doors, and the nights are invariably cool and refreshing. But the out of doors part of life down here is sad and gives one that tired feeling, if one hasn't it already. You can see its effect on the inhabitants, the ani-mals, and even the scenery. "The flirtatious and giddy prairie dog is less agile than his northern brothers, the hollow-eyed and musical coyote, prima donna of the plants, scorns to assume aught but a haughty, dignified gait and subdued vocal-

"And then, the scenery, as they are pleased to call it down there. A little sand and rock, and a few cacti and Spanish bayonets look well, indeed, isolated in the conservatory of a pork prince or a soap magnate; but when you see nothing but miles and miles of them, they have a depressing effect, especially if you own the land and your cattle are starv-ing to death on it. The unostentatious but insinuating cactus and the stately and sapo-naceous Spanish bayonet (in the vernacular, "soap-weed") look first-rate, in perspective say, on the pages of a geography. 2,000 miles from there—but in that corner they don't attract much attention, unless one is so unfortunate as to meet them in the dark. The cacti are covered with thorns, same as The cacti are covered with thorns, same as geography cacti (known in New Mexico as cactuses), but they don't stick into one so very, very far. But the 'soap-weed,' (with its tail, straight pole, decorated at the top with a cluster of large blossoms very like lilies of the valley) is different. I know, for I've tried it. One of those long speers would jab through a 2x2 scantling, and is long enough to file a millionaire philanthropist's annual grist of touching appeals on. Practical Identity.

"The cacti, too, have blossoms, but they are rather on the loud poppy style of beauty. Cacti grow in curious shapes, the most unmfortable of which is the recumbent shape. The plant in this shape is not unlike a flat stone, when seen in the gathering gloom. It is easy, however, to ascertain whether the blect is a flat stone or a cactus, by simply

"But, as I was saying, the scenery down there is just like the rest of nature. It doesn't have the sportive Kansas cyclone to shift it around twice in a while or so, but gust stays put and doesn't seem to care, either. Ennui doesn't seem to have gotten into that market. Everybody seems satisfied—that is, everybody who is indigenous. It is said that an enterprising easterner once shipped in quite a lot of ennui, hoping to get the natives to indulge in it, get dissatisfied and get a move on, but for some reason the plan didn't work. I reckon everybody wondered what he should want to be discontented for; it's their way, and a good way, too, maybe, tending to eupepsy and a green old age. "When I went down there we had dinner at Deming. Deming is a place that dropped down from nowhere and lit on the dreary desert, so that people might get off the trains and get something to eat. It has become quite a gor-geously-painted and self-assertive little town, and every man who lives in Deming seems to want you to know it, which is a good thing for the town. All the same, I think there is a good deal of forced enthus-iasm about those Deming chaps; I really don't see how one can put his whole heart into shouting for a little collection of house into shouting for a little collection of houses scattered around in the sand at a place where there is nothing, apparently, to do, but to come over to the station and see the trains come and go. Not that I saw many people loafing around the depot, but from a casual glance one wonders what other occupation they can have.

Resemble the Finger of Fate.

"Deming is right on the level plain, but near the foothills. There are two or three foothills within a few miles of Deming that look lonesome; they stick up out of the level plain like the finger of fate, several hundred feet high, and seem to feel their position keenly. No one ever goes to see them.

"Off to the right, quite a piece, is Cook's peak, which is quite peaked and altitudinous. There are several well-paying silver mines in its vicinity.

nous. There are several well-paying silver mines in its vicinity.

"Oh, yes, I went to Silver City. That's one of the places I started for. Well—but say, I started to tell about the heat, didn't If Never mind, though. I'll tell you what I saw down there, part of it, anyway.

"Southeast of Silver City there is a high rock, known as Santa Rita, just below which is a figure called the 'Kneeling Nun.'

"At Santa Rita there are ancient copper mines which are said to have been worked by the early Spaniards, who seem to have by the early Spaniards, who seem to have been quite prominent here when Cortez was in the country. Walking Hat Racks.

"The desert between Deming and Silver City looks no more cheerful or inviting than it does between Rincon and Deming. It is all of a piece—some rocks, some sand, some cacti and soap-weed, and the unfortunate cattle that have to eke out here an existence which is but a mockery at best (and a hollow mockery, too). look real delicate. One can't help thinking what an excellent hat rack and fire screen one of the poor creatures would make. And yet only a celient hat rack and fire screen one of the poor creatures would make. And yet only a half dozen years ago, maybe, this desolate waste was as good a grazing country as could be desired, and thousands of cattle thrived upon its tall, succulent grasses. From 1886, I believe, the cattlemen date their trouble. Since that year there has not been enough rain to mention, hence no grass. So it appears water, judiciously administered, is quite a good thing sometimes. "Down there on the desert, on a hot day, the mirage has the stage all to itself. Look-"Down there on the desert, on a hot day, the mirage has the stage all to itself. Looking back from the train one afternoon at a few forlorn cattle standing some distance from the track, it seemed, suddenly, as though they were in an inundited cornfield, kneedeep in water; off to the right was a lovely lake, its waves sparkling in the sunlight; farther still was another lake, with a city on its shore, the tail roofs and spires shining like polished silver. These all vanished, and the whole plain seemed covered with water, which appeared to be rapidly overtaking the train. Then came new illusions, one after another, until we almost forgot that we were on a slow train, bumping over a great stretch of sand and cacti and soap-weed, and might have imagined ourselves looking through a new and wonderful kaleidoscopeno I wonder if the cattle see all these things, and if they are ever deceived! If they do and are, then it must keep 'em pretty busy running after water that doesn't exist.

"It is a good deal of satisfaction to know that the poor critters look cool once in awhite, anyhow."

FUNERAL OF MRS. ELGUTTER.

Simple Services at the Residence-Rev. Dr. Franklin's Address.
Almost within the shadow of the home where she was reared, and of the stately temple of learning whence she stepped forth seven years ago a bright girl graduate just budding into womanhood, the friends of Nellie Elgutter's too short but happy lifetime assembled yesterday afternoon to pay the last tributes to the memory of a loved one gone before. The services were held at the residence of the deceased at Twentieth and St. Mary's avenue. School mates of her girihood, later friends of her mature womanhood, and friends of the family whose acquaintance dated back to the days when friendship meant more than an empty word, gathered there in silent sympathy to shed sorrow's

In the front parlor of the enshrouded home rested the casket wherein lay the re-mains beneath a wreath of flowers. At the mains beneath a wreath of flowers. At the head stood a large column of white roses and carnations, surmounted by a white dove with outstretched pinions, clasping a tiny white rosebud on a fragile stem, while mantels and fireplaces were almost hidden from sight behind mounds and pillows of floral gems and unbunched flowers, mutely eloquent expressions of a general and sincere grief.

It was impossible for all to find room within the entrance and many stories within the entrance, and many stood patiently without until the short services at the home were concluded. Rev. Dr. Frank-lin officiated, reading the Psalm XC, after which a short, but fervent and tender prayer was offered. To the many sorrowing ones he extended sympathy and consolation in these words:
"Mourning friends, a sad and sacred duty has called us here together this afternoon.

We have assembled in this house of mourning to pay the last sad tribute of respect and love to the memory of one who was dear to many hearts. This young wife and mother just enter-ing into the bloom of noblest womanhood, called from those she loved and those who loved her, to that mysterious realm where time lapses into eternity and where death and separation are unknown. It is always and separation are unknown. It is always sad, my friends, to stand at the coffin of a dear one, or at the open grave to bid the last farewell to one we love, but it is doubly sad to do so when the one called home had scarcely yet begun to live, and for whom the sweets of life were all in store. And there fore, friends who stand about this coffin that enshrines the mortal remains of Mrs. Nellie Elguter, I mourn and grieve with you, for I know how deep must be the wound that has been inflicted on you. But deep as is the wound; hard to bear as is the blow, is there no balm to heal your wounded hearts! Is there no solace to dry the tears that will not be restrained! We know that in an hour like this reason is cold and philosophy is cheerless to the broken heart; we know that words fall with the dull thud of emptiness upon the spirit filled with grief, and religion itself scarce penetrates the dark cloak of sadness that encircles you. But when the first most bitter hour is past, we feel that our words will come back to you with force redoubled to comfort and to solace you, and enshrines the mortal remains of Mrs. Nellie redoubled to comfort and to solace you, and therefore, in the very face of grief, we speak. Death, it seems, has robbed you of the fairest gem in all the jewel casket of your ife; of a daughter, faithful and affec-tionate; a wife, sympathetic, loving, tender hearted and forgiving—born as it seems to die, even as the flower that bloomin the morning is dead and d with the evening light. But she who lies before us is not dead. She lives in that life which to bring into existence she has sacrificed her own. She has met death at the altar of love, at the altar of duty, at the altar of noblest motherhood. In the solation, thou husband so bereaved. Let it become the link that shall bind you in undying love to the memory of her whom today we bid to rest, and in that child must be your solace, too, you mourning parents, brothers, sisters, for in that child your dear one lives, and with God's blessing shall live on to honorable womanhood, Thank God that in the very hour he has afflicted you he has granted balm unto your bleeding hearts. Thank Him that the one you mourn was such a nobie girl, such a true woman, such a faithful and self sacrificing wife and daughter, and pray to Him for courage to bear the blow that He has in-flicted, for He is the God that smitch but flicted, for He is the God that smitch but bindeth up again. Of her, for whom the hour of parting has arrived, we shall say naught. Her many noble qualities, her kindliness of spirit, her loveliness of disposi-tion, her true womanly modesty, all speak more eloquently than could lor any other man. To her returning soul, pure as it came from the hands of its Maker, we say one last, one sad farewell, and in the words of the sage of old, 'Give her of the fruits of her own hands, and let her own works praise in the gates.' Amen."

Once more the friends were allowed to look upon the familiar face, then the precious burden was raised and borne to the precious burden was raised and borne to the waiting hearse. The pall bearers were Messrs. C. N. Powell, Rev. Dr. J. T. Duryea, Max Meyer, W. L. McCague, Albert Cahn, Charles McConnell, Martin Cahn and George Pundt. To Pleasant Hill cemetery the cortege drew its way, and there, after the reading of a meditation and the mourners' benediction, on the gently rolling hilltop that overlooks both city and valley, and where the sun last lingers ere dipping below the western horizon, the beloved form was tenderly consigned to the bosom of that universal mother of us all.

VIEWS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE SMELTER

Will Not Reduce Forces for a Month Under Any Circumstances-Effect of India's Action on the Silver Question-Remonetization Certain.

Ex-Governor J. B. Grant of Colorado, president of the great company that operites the smelting and refining works both in this city and Denver, came in from his home in the latter city Sunday evening for a conference with his business associates relative to the silver situation.

To a representative of THE BEE, who found him at the Millard yesterday merning, Mr. Grant said that the compan; would not discharge a man for the purpose of reducing forces either in this city or Denver for the next month at least, even if affairs should take the most unfavorable turn, as there was enough ore in sight to keep both plants in full oper-ation for thirty days without buying an-other pound. No more silver ore will be purchased until the situation resolves itself into something more definite than it is at present, though other ores will find a ready market as before. Mr. Grant admitted that market as before. Mr. Grant admitted that at present things looked dark for the mining interests and said that everything pointed to the speedy repeal of the Sherman law. He did not know what would be done by western interests to prevent it, except by the senators and representatives of the mining states, though there had been a little talk of big meetings to present petitions and protests.

When asked to express his views as to the pest and surest way of obtaining relief, he replied: "My plan would be free coinage, limited to the American product, in a ratio of twenty or twenty-two and a half to one. It has been about twenty-five for the past six months, and that has been a little too high. There will be no increase in the production at 80 cents, while at 60 cents, there would be at 80 cents, while at 60 cents there would be a tremendous falling off. A great many of the mines would not pay to work at that figure. I expect to see a better price for lead than for some time past, as there has been a great deal of what might be called incidental lead produced from mixed ores that were worked for silver. The lead in such cases would be produced even if the price was as low as a quarter of a cent a pound, but now that the smelting of such ores will be that the smelting of such ores will be stopped, there will be a falling off of this in-cidental lead product and a consequent stiffening of price. The stoppage of free coinage by India and the attendant dropping out of the very bottom of the silver market was a paralyzer to the silver men.

"India has been for years the great sinkhole into which both gold and silver have poured, never to be seen or heard of again, and it seems to me that this fact will sooner or later result in the remonetization of silver. That country will continue to raise grain. cotton, tea and opium, and the excess of its exports over its imports will have to be represented in something or other that will flow in there. Up to this time it has been gold and silver, to the extent of about $15,000,000 of gold and $45,000,000 of silver every year. The people take it and hoard it-practically bury it, and there it stays. Now, if they get the idea that silver is no longer worth anything, they are going to take gold and refuse silver, and the gold would be hoarded the same way, as they do not need it to use. It would not take long to make gold a very scarce article in London, Paris ally be remonetized. It has not been until the last six years that the silver production has reached $100,000,000. Last year it was $152,000,000 and the year before $144,000,000. This increase was caused by the big production in Australia, and the increased production in Mexico, due to the opening up of new railrends and the extension of old ones. stated. I think the question would be very satisfactorily solved.

"Nebraska is all right. Good crops and hogs will take care of her, if the farmers can get anything for them, and they ought to, as there is to be a short crop in Europe, I nover saw the crops looking better at this time of year. I only saw one poor field between here and the state line. It struck me all the way along that the fields were remarkably clean and free from weeds, and that rain at the proper time was all that markably clean and free from weeds, and that rain at the proper time was all that was necessary to insure an enormous crop. I noticed by yesterday's papers that the hog receipts at South Omaha were larger than at Chicago, so that as far as rival packing centers are concerned Nebraska does not seem to be getting any the worst of it.
