The school board held a meeting last evening, at which it was decided that the program a part of the state superintendent of public instruction for Arbor day celebration on the 27th should be thrown one side and that no observance of the day should be made so far as the public schools of the city are concerned.

This was probably due to the fact that Member Snyder reported that he had been told by the superintendent of the state that the celebration was all that was necessary for one year.

DRUGGED WITH GIN.

That is what Mrs. Smith of Fremont, Neb., claims Was the Matter.

The case of Mrs. Jennie Smith against the Citizens' National bank is on trial in the district court. Extended mention of this suit has already been made in the Bee, and the sensational disclosures already made public are found not to have been overdrawn.

Mrs. Smith was in Denver, and while there she saw an advertisement in a paper asking for a female companion for a gentleman who had given up traveling. She claimed that her nephew had answered it as a joke, and the man who had advertised called at the room in the hotel St. James, where she was stopping.

Mrs. Smith denied having answered the advertisement, an acquaintance sprung up after afterwards became quite intimate.

Mrs. Smith's husband lives in Fremont, Neb. They were not living together at the time, but Mr. Smith occupies a chair by his wife's side in the trial of the present case.

While in Denver, where it is said to be in the real estate business, took Mrs. Smith up to Longmont, Colo., to look at a piece of real estate which she was about to purchase. A purchase was made and a certificate of deposit for $1,800 was given in payment. Mrs. Smith is now suing to recover the certificate.

She claims that during her intimacy with Proctor she was in the habit of drinking gin on account of kidney trouble, and several times Proctor got her medicine for her. He also drank of gin.

This took place, she says, on the day when the transfer of the real estate was made. She says that when she assigned the certificate to the bank she was under the influence of the liquor, which had been drugged. The clerk of the St. James hotel has testified under oath that he had seen a room in the hotel in a dead faint on the night in question. The president of the Longmont bank, F. H. Stickey, on the other hand, is sure she was under the influence of gin.

The bank transaction took place she seemed to be perfectly rational. The transfer of the paper was made in his bank. There are many interesting features in the testimony.

Edouard Lockroy Describes Ironclads as a Navy.

PARIS, April 16.—At a meeting of the commission appointed by the Chamber of Deputies to examine into the condition of the navy Edouard Lockroy, a leading member of the commission, read a long report. He said the anxiety regarding the condition of the navy had only been increased by the inquiry, which had shown that the navy was not ready to mobilize and that the stores were depleted owing to the negligence of the administration.

The report was read in the presence of the navy without crews and the turret ship Magenta was worthless. M. Lockroy ended by declaring that economies, without detriment to the efficiency of the navy, must be made and that a change in officials was imperative.

Admiral Valon made a report as to the condition of the Magenta, saying she would capture in the first week of the war, which might be subjected. Her unarmored parts were exposed when she rolled. He urged that France should stop building ironclads which he declared to be a waste of money to the country. The commission decided to consider the subject before accepting the reports.

He admitted that the defendant sat through it all with the same stolid indifference that has marked her manner from the first. Even when the attorney held up the bloody corset of the victim and thrust a knife through the holes made by the assassin's remains, the defendant was unmoved. Boardman will probably conclude his remarks tomorrow.
