PROMISES FOR A SMARTER WEEK BRIGHT

Marriage of Miss Polack and Mr. Rubel-High School Juniors Present a Play-Celebrated Their Wooden Wedding-Doings of the swells.

Pienics and bowls will succeed to the favor of the swells now that summer is almost here. Already the circles of society are on the qui vive for little outings to the new Fort Crook and visits to near-by country homes which have been opened for the season. Quite a jolly party drove out to J. N. Chamber's farm Friday night and enjoyed themselves notably. Mrs. Humphrey, who knows so well the art of entertaining, gave a charming out-of-door function for ger guest, Miss Thomas, Fort Crook being visited. These are only the forerunners of the affairs which will illuminate the social page for several months to come, and until the real hot weather drives the fashionables to cooler climates, plenies and bowling parties, with tennis tournaments ad lib, may be looked upon as inevitable. There are rumors that many of the well-to-do people will summer in Europe, but "until their tickets are bought," said a steamship agent, 'I look upon these rumors with very little favor. No class of people change their minds so quickly as society leaders and particularly when Europe is to be visited. It is easy to talk, but that very often is all that it amounts to."

The Thurston Rifles. The drill on Saturday evening, April 28, was held out of doors on the company parade grounds, opposite the city hall on Eighteenth street, and was devoted to platoon movements. Owing to the absence of Second Lieutenant Johnson, who was in Chicago on leave, the platoons were commanded by Captain Scharff and First Lieutenant W. J. Foy. Formation was sixteen files double rank in each platoon, with full complement of guides. All of the platoon movements were gone over thoroughly, and at the close of the drill there was a marked improvement in the cadence and stead ness First Sergeant William E. Stockham and Corporal Jesse Tompsett drilled the recruits in the armory, there being two squads of four files double rank. Edgar M. Free and G. B. Scrambling were elected to membership at the meeting held immediately after the drill last Monday evening.

On Monday evening, April 30, the company was divided up into squads in charge of the corporals, who put the men through the manual of arms by the numbers and without the numbers, this drill lasting about an hour, the object being to give the corporals the opportunity of learning to give the com-mands and instruct the men in their respective squads. The company is now supplied with sixty gun cases, which protect the rifles from be oming rusty from being handled without

Next to commencement the proudest night at Creighton college is the vigil of Saint James, the patron saint of Rev. James F X. Hoeffer, the president of the university. Monday, April 30, in honor of the occasion, the faculty and students of both the collegiate and medical departments united to pay honors, which they felt were more than A host of friends and patrons gathered on a kindred mission, and the spacious col lege hall rang again and again with enthusiastic cheers as the young men of the university testified with music and song and words of loyal love, the esteem which superior worth elicits from one and all. Floral tributes from the faculty and students were rich and varied.

After the rendition of the appended program, the president responded in his hapdest strain, and evoked much enthusiasm by referring to the splendid work done dur ing the year, and the superior rank which the university has taken, and intends to hold among the educational institutions of High School Juniors Entertain Friday evening the High school juniors gave their first social. They are allowed to give but one entertainment in their junior year, so they were determined to make the most of their opportunity. The long talked of play entitled "1900" was produced and pronounced a great success with Miss Stacia Crowley as patroness. "1900" is one of those very satisfactory plays in which every role is a leading one and runs in this wise: Mr. Carberry, an eligible bachelor (Mr. Hamilton Gillispie), upon returning after a long stay in China learns from his Wigfall (Mr. John Shank), that during his absence the women have come to the front and the ballot box has crushed the band hox flat. The young ladies in the cast were Miss Katle Swartzlander, Miss Miss Kuhne and Miss Robison. Rebison, as the old-fashioned girl, "would rather be asked to dance or well-anything," was very charming indeed. Miss Clarence Williamson represented a news girl and Miss Bartlett a police woman An ovation greeted the really alive baby and Mr. Harry Cross, as "a nice neat man who does general housework." After the play came the banquet. Mr.

The following sentiments were remaster. Privileges and Reaponded to: "Junior Privileges and Re-atrictions," Mr. Fred Parsons; "The Girli of "95." Mr. Gillispic: "The Boys of "95." Miss Nellie Gamble; "The Awkward Squad." Mr. Herbert Oberfelder; "The Seventh Hour," Edwin Chapin. The responses were all that they ought to be, brief, brilliant and well delivered. The rest of the evening was devoted to singing and dancing. The reception and banquet halfs were ar-tistically draped in the class colors and decorated with cut flowers. At 12 o'clock good nights were said, and the class yell given by 107 vigorous young voices in a tone that would stir the blood of a mummy. The class was honored by the presence of Principal and Mrs. Lewis and other memhera of the faculty.

J. T. Austin.

So successful was the first course of readings in French by Mons. Chatelain that he began a second series of five yesterday morning at the residence of Mrs. John L. Webster, a very much larger attendance being re-marked. Two charming stories were read marked. Two charming stories were read by this clever Frenchman, "Le Teneur de Livres," (The Bookkeeper) and "Le Billet de Loterie No. 13,028." The last sketch was beautifully read, the action of the play tak-ing place in France, the plot hinging upon a merchant who buys a lottery ticket unknown to his wife and he draws the grand Fearful that his wife will condemn prize. him for gambling he goes to the woman who sold him the ticket and asks her to get the money. The next day, however, the papers announce that a mistake had been made in the number of the ticket and that No. 113,028 had drawn the prize. The pretty merchant comes to the store of Mons. Pasquier to tell him of the mistake and to ask the 500 francs he had promised her. The merchant re-fuses and implores the girl to leave the shop as his wife would hear her, but at that moment Mme Pasquier appears and knowing all falls dead of an attack of apoplexy.

IN LOCAL MUSICAL CIRCLES.

The Harmony club will give its second concert at the First Methodist Episcopal church Tuesday evening, May 22, at which time Gaul's sacred oratorio, "Israel," will be sung with soloists, organ and orchestra. The chorus will number eighty voices, and those who attended the first concert given by the club will remember with satisfaction th excellent chorus singing of this young and vigorous society. The solo parts will be taken by Mrs. Fred Nye, mezzo-soprano, Captain John Kinzie, tenor, Lucien B. Cope-land, baritone, with Mr. W. T. Taber at the organ, and Boyd's orchestra under Bert Butler assisting, and will be directed by Mr.

Thomas Kelly. "Israel" is the latest and most pretentious work of Mr. Gaul, who is the author of "The Holy City." "Joan of Arc." "The Ten Virgins," "Ruth," etc., all of which have been given here, and it deals with the children of largest from their release from bondage to Israel from their release from bondage to their arrival and journey in the wilderness. The music throughout is of a dignified character with strong oriental colorings, and when given with organ and orchestra in the splendid auditorium of the First Method-ist Episcopal church will no doubt be a perworthy the liberal patronage of Omaha people.

The benefit concert tendered Miss Myrtle Coon will occur Thursday evening, May 24, at Masonic hall, instead of on the 22d inst. as heretofore announced.

Mr. Ray Thomas, well known in musical circles, has accepted a position with the Kansas City Plano company, Kansas City, Mo., and will leave for that place on the 15th inst.

The concert to be given at Boyd's on Friday evening, May 18, by the Omaha Mandolin orchestra and Imperial Banjo and Guitar club seems to be attracting general attention, and those who have been present at the rehearsals of the clubs are enthuslastic in their praise. Inquiries as to the number of players in each club are still coming in, and to satisfy these inquirers. The Bee announces that the mandolin crchestra has fifty-two members and banjo club twenty-four. Both clubs wi decorated with national colors. Both clubs will be

Miss Ellen Beach Yaw will appear in a grand concert at Boyd's theater on Thurs-day night. She has a wonderful voice, phe-nomenal in compassiand singularly pure in quality. Some musicians in and around Omaha have heard her, and they readily ad-mit that she is all that is claimed for her. Her compass exceeds that of any singer on record, and in addition to that her work is all truly artistic. This is the first season for the young artiste and it has been a brilliant one. She is an American girl and de erves American patronage. Those who go to hear her will not be disappointed,

The Chicago Inter Ocean, speaking of Miss
Yaw, says: "Miss Yaw's debut in America The Chicago Inter Ossan, speaking of sits Yaw, says: "Miss Yaw's debut in America occurred a month or so ago at one of the Damrosch concerts. The impression she made in New York was remarkable, for, in the light of the brilliant operatic season, the young concert singer scored a complete success. In Parls Miss Yaw had sung at salon concerts, winning the approval of the critics, and, in particular, Mme. Christine Nilsson. Miss Yaw's voice is remarkable in that its and, in particular, since Caristine Sitson.

A dress rehearsal of the religious play "Hannele" was given in New York Monday night for the purpose of enabling the authorities to determine whether or not it uld be prohibited as blasphemous. The play presents an ill-used child's dream of death, and represents the Savior under another name. Nym Crinkle pronounces the work as portrayed on the stage "novel, anomalous, slightly painful, but not at all blasphemous. It can hardly be a popular play, because the populace do not go to the theater for obsequies, and perhaps prefer to take their mortuary lessons in some other place. It will, however, remain a curi-sity, inasmuch as it has cut away from place. the drama of the moment and gone straight into the symbolism and mysticism that are just now being taken up by art in France and Germany as a relief from the pessimism and despair to which materialism has driven both the drama and literature." The decision of the city authorities has not been announced. The Philadelphia Record tells the following interesting story: 'That veteran but still charming actress, Mrs. John Drew, recently had an experience that was as unique as it was pleasant. She was play-ing in a southern town and accepted an invitation to attend a reception. Her hostess urged her to be sure to keep the engage-ment, 'because an old gentleman is to be there who was present at your first per-formance on any stage and remembers it distinctly, though he was only 3 years old at the time.' She refused to tell his name, at the time.' She refused to tell his name, and Mrs. Drew says she thought of nothing else for three days, even dreaming of the old gentleman. Finally the day came, and Mrs. Drew encountered at the door of the ouse her old friend, Joseph Jefferson, who said to her: 'Just fancy, I am to meet an old lady here today who saw me act the first time I ever appeared on the stage. I'm When they got in quite excited over it.' side the hostess confessed that she had tried her little ruse in order to get both of the artists to attend, and Jefferson admitted that Mrs. Drew had attended his first appearance on any stage." GATHERING OF THE WOMEN.

The second biennial of the General Federation of Women's Clubs will be held in Philadelphia May 9, 10 and 11, 1894. The first session commences Wednesday norning in the New Century club house, 124 outh Twelfth street. Among the topics winch will claim attention are two which may interest the various clubs more than some others. These topics are "The Ideal Club and How to Attain it," and "The Ideal Federation and How to Realize it." Among the thirty-six states included in the federaion Nebraska is of the number with two clubs-the Omaha Woman's club of Omaha and the Zeletie club of Weeping Water, the latter having taken the initial step in join-ing the federation, while the former has but recently identified itself among the hundreds of women's clubs composing the tederation.

The clubs of each state will be reported on the second morning by the state chair-man of correspondence. Reception of club members and delegates will be given by the New Century club, which will be one of the pleasing features of the occasion. That the biennial will be a pleasant and successful affair will be conceded by any one who was privileged to attend the first

CARLYLE'S LIFE REVIEWED

Lecture Delivered by Prof. Vincent at the Linlager Art Gallery. Prof. Leon H. Vincent, the well known Chautauquan, lectured on Thursday evening in the Lininger gallery on "Carlyle," before a large gathering of refined and evidently deeply interested nember. He began by asking his audience to go back with him in imagination to a stormy night in February, 1881, when a party of three gentlemen were leaving London by one of the fast trains going to Scotland. They were well known men. James Anthony Froude, W. E. H. Lecky and John Tyndall. It was a very unpretentions gathering, according to the testimony of a high These gentlemen were simply on witness. veying to their final resting place the of Thomas Carlyle. It was totally wanting in that pemp and sad dignity that recode think is befitting the burial of a famous man.

What a contrast was presented in the fun-eral of Fred Archer, the noted English Jockey who committed sufcide. When this man buried business in Newmarket was entirely suspended. Three lords were among the mourners, and it is said that the prince of Wales sent a floral wreath. Thus does England honor her great ones. (Laughter.) It would not be fair to suppose that because of this unostentatious burial that Car-

...Lemmens lyle's memory is not revered by the English seople. It was out of respect to his wishes hat the ceremonial was such a simple It is well known that Dean Stanley offered Westminster Abbey as a place of burial, but the old humorist made it impossible that this should be done. He made the remark after some man with a good deal more dignity of birth than he had been honored with an abbey burnal that "If we do not ook out on the day of judgment there would general jail delivery from Westminster Abbey.

Carlyle was a literary hero and in the world of letters he stands so conspicuously unique that it is hard to find another at all like him. He has, however, been regarded by some as a man hard to get along with, and such critics, while admitting that he was a great master of prose intimate that he was not a pleasant person o live in the same house with.

Here is one instance of his magnimity of coul. It was at the time of his great financial depression. Amid a great deal of clamor he was studying over the first volume of 'French Revolution.' His friend, Stuart Mill, borrowed the manuscript for the sake of reading it, and, without permission Mill lent it to the young lady who after-ward became his wife. It somehow got into the hands of this lady's servant, who made short work with the fruit of for months' toll by lighting her mistress's bedroom fire with it. Carlyle was exceedingly irritable about such little things and allowed himself to be made terribly uncomfortable about trivial matters, and when uncomfortable himself he would make others around him uncomfortable. But on great occasions he showed his nobility of mind. When he heard of the catastrophe that had befallen his manuscript his first thought was what a blow this must be to Mill and how Mill must suffer. Carlyle said he would con-ceal the disaster from Mill. Consider what this loss meant to Carlyle. It was the only manuscript he had, and it had taken him upwards of four months to write But while this accident gave him great mental worry, he was not discouraged, but set to work and rewrote it, though with great difficulty, as he was a very painstak-ing writer and did not have the advantage of a good memory.

He was deeply affected by the generosity of certain American publishers, who, although there was no copyright law in effect between this country and Great Britain sent him £150 for royalty on his work before he had ever received a cent from Fraser, the English publisher. When he received this money he went to Frazer and told him that he ought to blush for shame that while everybody had made money out of the book the man who wrote it with his heart's blood had not received a penny until his friends across the ocean had sent him a handsome sum. He was 39 years of age, with a powers most magnificently matured. had written some of the most magnificent masterpieces of English literature and yet his position was as insecure as a man that takes up his pen for the first time. Men recognized his genius. You cannot deny the blaze of a hot sun over your head, but they did not know what to do with this lawless genius. They tried to get him a position on ecording to instructions. rather forbidding in aspect. He never flat-tered anybody and that was against him Then came his saddest hour. He was so ugly over his sorrow that he was positively lime in his ugliness. This great blow was the loss of his manuscript. It was especially hard on him as he did not write easily. Carlyle's method was this: He would fill himself with forty, fifty or sixty volumes and then set to work to get the substance of them into one little volume. When he launched his famous book on the world it was done in a rather dazed con dition. After he had finished it he said to his mother: "It is all done and we are to go with the wind and the tide. I judge that it will gain ten enemies for one friend. world went wild over this savage book written by a wild man. Emerson wrote to Carlyle, urging him to come to America and ecture. In fact, Emerson hinted at his coming over here to live. At this period the famous friendship between Emerson and Carlyle began, and it was a friendship of a

In England Harriet Martineau started subscription for a lecture, and had no dif-ficulty in selling 300 tickets at a guinea ($5) apiece. A hall was rented and the lectur was delivered. There was a wonderful lo of information packed into this discourse He was a rare philosopher, although pratorical powers were somewhat limited But his very sincerity of purpose made I hard for him to speak in public. He once remarked: "I suppose even a sincere man can talk tolerably well without telling many lyle became very nervous. He told his mother that he feared when he got to the hall and saw those 300 people, who had paid a guinea apiece for tickets, he would say to them: "Good Christian people, it has become utterly impossible for me to talk about German literature or anything terrestrial. One thing I will ask you and that is to cover me with a tub and go home with my blessing."

However, the audience were intensely moved. They laughed and wept and applauded, but Carlyle hated the whole busi-ness. He called it his exhibition. They had paid simply to see him, and he wrote to his friend Erskine: "If you love me stay away. When I stand up there nine-tenths of me ill be gone and the other tenth going." His work, however, became remunerative rom that time. The lecturer then touched on Carlyle's wedded life. Mrs. Carlysle was a wonderful woman and well worthy of being the wife of such a distinguished man. She had lovely dark eyes, a splendidly formed head and was the daughter of a well-to-do physician. Sho was full of fire and every ready to turn into ridicule any imprudent remark that Car-lyle might make. In fact at times she so exasperated him that he told her she was a little devil. She read Latin well and could enjoy Virgil when she was 9 years old, reading him in the original. Her maiden name was Welch, and when she first met Carlyle she had no thought of marrying him, but she regarded it as a pleasing thing to see the most remarkable man intellectually she had ever met at her feet. She would ridcule his Scotch accent and when she had managed to get him thoroughly worked up she would wheedle him back into good she would wheedle him back into humor and make him feel so comfortable and pleased with himself that he would tell her he believed she was a witch. She was very outspoken in her disliker. On one occasion writing from a house she did not like, she dated her letters from hell. She was made up in part of the coquette and the shrew. Her mother said that she had been known to be in fifteen different humors in one after-noon. It is not to be supposed that a woman's ability to take care of her own household and her husband depends upon her avoirdupols. Mrs. Carlyle was a very small woman, but-(laughter). A good deal of nonsensical senti-mentalism has been wasted over Mrs. Car-lyle since her death that would have been a source of annoyance to her and is perfectly

Carlyle was the most honest writer that ever wrote. He laid down a fixed rule that ie would never write for money alone. That he would never set down a single sor that he did not believe to be the truth. The lecturer closed by a quotation from "Sartor Resartus."

ritz of Berlin, chamberlain to the emperor, officer of the royal lancers, was the name, address and string of titles inscribed on the register of the Palace hotel here on March S by the tallest man who has visited San Francisco for many a day. The tall baron brought letters of introduction which secured him entrance to several clubs and to a few houses on Nob Hill. He became a conspicuous figure in the swell set and received many attentions, particularly in German circles. But now the tall man of many titles has fled. He left suddenly yesterday and his reported destination is New Orleans. his reported destination is New Orleans, The Examiner prints an interview in which the baron declares he was driven out of San Francisco by the importunities of the city's society girls, who were anxious to ex-change their hearts and hands and fortunes. for his rank and his castle on the Rhine Fabulous fortunes were even laid at the baron's feet, he says. When the society women finally would give him no peace and his mail by the morning just became a thing to be dreaded, the baron fled the city.
