A rather fine point was sprung yesterday morning by the attorneys for Mr. and Mrs. Melzer, who tried to bunco Dr. Mulhern out of $50 by a blackmalling proceeding. The case has been in process of trial for several days past, and the evidence introduced against them was very damaging, indicating beyond the possibility of a doubt that the doctor was not the only intended victim The attorneys for the defense yesterday took advantage of a fine technicality, on which they hope to secure their clients' release. When two persons are married they become one, and it is a well established fact that one person cannot enter into a conspiracy alone. Consequently the attorneys for the defense ask that the cale be dismissed, and the point was argued for several hours. At 3 o'clock Judge Lewis took the case under advisement and adjourned court until this morning at 9:30 o'clock, when he will render a decision. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve cures piles false I will pay you well." He told Payne of the vacant building and said it was a good place for what he wanted the latter to do. "I'll tell you, Rayne," said Brown, "If you put that girl out of the way I will give you $25. Here's $1 and I will see you formarrow and give you the said Brown. "If you put that girl out, of the way I will give you $25. Here's $1 and I will see you tomorrow and give you the rest. Payne then told how he killed the girl, and said that at 7 o'clock in the evening of the Mon-day after Maud disappeared both he and Brown were at the -weent building. He said he was at the head of the stairs closing one of the doors and Brown at the foot. He was holding a conversation with Brown and was nothing a conversation with Brown and they had it planned that Brown should leave the building first and croas the tracks, going south; Payne to go north, home. He said that while Brown was at the foot of the stairs he turned to him and said: "Don't come for a moment." Brown then waved his hand toward Payne. The foremer her the hand toward Payne. The former left the building, but Payne said instead of going south he went east on Leavenworth street. Payne aw no more of Brown till Wednes-day. He went to Brown's rooms on Tenth street, his object being to collect the other $24. Brown said he had bought an interest in a shooting gallery and as soon as he could get some money out of it he would give Payne the money. After this Payne saw Brown no more. He said what he had done began to worry him and this account was he OB left the Windsor and went to the Drexel. He said that he did not want to be near the scene of the crime. He never went to look for Brown, but he heard the latter had called at the Windsor several times to see him. Payne said hs wife had nothing to do with the murder, but had seen him in company with Brown once and asked: "What are you going around with that gray-headed man for?" Payne did not tell his wife what he had done. He said she would never have be-lieved it if he had told her. Brown never gave any other reason for wanting the girl out of the way than that he did not want to stand the disgrace of having the public know he had been int mate with her. He said she could be put out of the way said she could be plit out of the way much better than having their relations made known. He (Brown) would usually add: "I'm getting tired of giving her money every time she asks for it, and when she is refused she generally threatens to make matters known. This is what I was afraid she would do some time. Payne concluded his confession on the train by saying if Brown would come to the front and tell what he knew th cause of Maud Rubel's death would be made clear. He said positively that he never had any idea of killing the girl till he met Brown; that it was the idea of obtaining the money promised by Brown that led him to do the deed, As soon as Sheriff Drexel left the train he telegraphed the order here to arrest Brown. Some of the detectives who were doing duty at the court house were detailed Telegram and descriptions were at once sent over the country. It was learned Brown was seen in Council Bluffs last night at S o'clock.

AGREES WITH FLEMING.

Payne's supplemented confession to Drexel tallies precisely with the statement of Officer Fleming regarding seeing Brown in the doorway of the McHugh building at 7:30 Monday evening when he appeared to be talking to some one at the head of the stairs This statement of Flemings was and is ye unknown to Payne, yet in describing his and Brown's visit to the McHugh building that evening, Payne even mentions the fact that Brown waved his hand to him to remain at the head of the stairs, a motion which Fleming noticed and spoke of. These facts seem to the police to be conclusive that Payne's latest statement is true, and now they are regretting that the county atorney released Brown so soon. Captain Mostyn and Datectives Dunn and Donahue after Payne's first confession took him to the vacant building, the scene of his crime. Payne minutely pointed out the different rooms, that is, the one in which he says the girl was killed and the one where her body was found. He without the slight est intimation of mistake reached around back of the door of room 5, where he said he killed the girl, and took up a piece of board. It was a piece of a drawer and bore no marks of blood. "This is what did it." said. He told of the veil and a wrap that were found in the room. He said the veil had been worn by Maud Rubel, but the

He also says that when he met Maud on the morning of the murder she asked him his name, which would show that he had not known her for two years, as he pretended.

MRS. RUBEL TALKS OF THE CASE.

Says that Part of Payne's Confession is False-Wants Brown Held.

Miss Ragodale, 10 Pearl street, will sell nicely trimmed Leghorn hats for $1.25, former price $2.50; best bats at $5.50, former A reporter for The Bee called at Mr. Rubel's home at South Omaha. Mr. Rubel was not at home, but Mrs. Rubel came to the door. She had just heard of Payne's confession, and was feeling very badly. We want everybody to know that Morgan sells paints and drugs. 134 and 742 Broadway.

"I am now pretty well satisfied that Payne is the man who killed Maudie," said she, "but as for him being intimate with her for two years or at any time the assertion is preposterous and untrue. Payne says he first met Maudie at a ball in South Omaha. The poor girl didn't know anything about dancing, and never attended one that we know of. She was a Sunday school girl and was never away from home at night. All last winter she slept in the same room with my husband and myself. We needed money badly, and in order to give us one more room to rent we fixed up a place in our bed room for Maude to sleep on. She was never away from home in the evening unless we knew exactly where she was. I believe that Payne found Maude near the building she was murdered in and inticed her into the place where he ravished and murdered her. I do not believe she ever knew Payne o ever even saw him before. The child had a horror of colored men, and the statement that she was Payne's mistress nearly drives me insane. "I hope the authorities will not turn

Brown loose until it is certain that Payne is guilty beyond dny<sup>i</sup> question of doubt. Payne has told so many stories already that we don't know hardly) what to believe. On trouble has heaped upon another of late we are now out of maney, and I am afraid Mr. Rubel will loss his mind entirely. I never can believe that Maudie was the mistrees of a colored man no matter whatever else they may say against her. There are many persons who will believe it though, and the whole circumstances, have about driven me crazy." Mr. and Mrs. Rubel have many friends in South Omaha, all of whom sympa-thize deeply with them." Mrs. Rubel has not been well since her daughter first disappeared, and Mr. Rubel acts very strangely at times. They live in the first flat directly over the postoffice and rent out several rooms. They have a grown son, but he is now out of employment, and the family are in circumstances which are embarrassing, to say the least.
