A writer for the Washington Post, armed with a note from Colonel John M. Wilson, chief officer of public buildings and grounds, entered the Washington monument about 4 o'clock, "stood in line and faced this way," went up in the elevator and at 8 o'clock that night proved that they were still there by swinging a lantern from one of the windows of the monument in Paul Revere style. It was the first time that strangers had been permitted to remain in the monument after the regular hour of closing, which fact had the effect of making the trip all the more interesting both to those who noticed after dark that there was a light in the monument as well as to members of the a Thunderstorm.

The evening was ideal for such an expedition. During the day all the weathers conceivable had passed in review to receive the maledictions of the people who suffered from the sudden changes, and the dusk clouded a sky that looked very undecided whether to smile or weep. In the west, and throwing dancing little waves of light into the Potomac, the sun set in radiance. In the east the great black clouds rolled up in heavy masses and made a glorious background for creamy, sun-tinted capitol. Toward the south the sunshine and rain had decided to be reconciled and the result was a glorious rainbow, which shed so much beauty on the pouting sky that the effulgence was reflected and a second rainbow was formed beside the first. From the north came a gusty, ill-mannered wind that wrapped the flags on the buildings around their staffs and left them there as afraid to flaunt their gorgeous colors in the face of the great red sun. B-low, little midgets and brownies seemed to be playing at seriousness.

MEN LOOKED LIKE PIGMIES.

Little creatures in the forms of men and women sat behind horses that looked no larger than the tiny tin steeds with which children are wont to amuse themselves. These little animals were urged to speed over the ground, and with a complacency for which, at our height, we could perceive no cause, the drivers watched what they suppos.d to be the rapid annihilation of space. To us they seemed to be but crawling over the smooth roads. Off to one side a crowd the smooth roads. Off to one side a crowd of boys were playing ball, but their shouts did not reach us in our elevated grand-stand. As the darkness fell the character of the scene changed. The pleasure seekers turned the horses' heads toward home and the boys wandred away. The flags on the buildings were lowered and the streets, in-stead of being filled with prosperouse looking men and handsomely gowned women, were now throng with laboring people, some of whom, even from that distance, gave the impression of being happy in their release, just as the dejection of others ascended to just as the dejection of others ascended to that height. The clouds rolled up heavier and darker.

The little patches of gold sank into gloomy valleys, and the great, inky masses blotted out the delicate blue and white traceris. The capitol, now a cold white, looked like a huge icy castle against the threatening sky. The fresh green grass of the white lot grew darker and darker, until it mixed with the blackness of the night, the arches and pil-lars of the white house grew less and less distinct, the huge treasury and department buildings gradually faded out of sight like some great, ghostly thing, until finally the city was obliterated and the earth, air and sky were merged into one.

Then, one by one, the lights appeared. On the grassy plat at the foot of the monument, a little ray of light shot out and then another and another until the circle was outlined by little firefly lights.

DECLARATIONS OF WAR.

the mall the sparks started out. A light ap-peared first at one window and then another The brisk war that has been in progress in Corea and Corean waters with no declaof the executive mansion until the building was girded with three bands of light. The streets became outlined with lights, which in the distance seemed to grow into each other and parted gradually as they grew nearer. ration of war between China and Japan until July 31 ought to do something to dislodge the curious hallucination which lingers Once more the city took on the aggressives air of business and activity. The life which during the twilight seemed to have become partially extinct appeared in renewed in the public mind and the minds of some editorial writers that a declaration of war usually precedes hostilities. The rule is the other way, says the Philadelphia Press. In the 171 years between 1700 and 1870 there were only ten instances of a regular declaration of war before fighting form, and the hurry and rush of the people again taking up the cares of the day could be felt, even at our height. Carelessness blended with the seriousness and idleness with the activity. Tired tourists sauntered by, and silent lovers, oblivious aliks of peobegan, and there were 107 in which a more or less decisive blow was struck before any declaration of war was made, and in many instances no declaration of war was ever made. In forty-one cases, as Colonel J. F. ple and monuments, wandered in and around the grounds with an aimlessness for every-Maurice points out in an admirable com-pilation on the subject, the declaration of thing but to avoid the lights.

AN AWE-INSPIRING THUNDERSTORM. war was delayed in order to make the sud-den and unexpected blow effective. The United States acted on this principle All the while, though, the lights were in-creasing. In every direction long lines of them stretched out and looked like gold when we seized every Brilish ship in our harbors without warning at the opening of stitches in a great seam. Every building was dotted with them, until the ungrateful lights demanded all the attention and the building sank into darkness. Convention hall, splendidly lighted for some entertainment there, became a veritable sunburst, while the pension building was swallowed up in night and the place where it should stand merely outlined by jets of light. The ll-luminations of Georgetown, Alexandria, Fort Myer and the Soldiers' home were plainly visible. Along the margins of the Potomac the frogs sang their not untuneful choruses with such vigor that the sounds floated in the windows at the summit of the monument. Every few minutes a train would whirl over its tracks like a streak of light and be lost the same year, while at peace with Turkey. France occupied Holland in 1794 without a declaration; Soleure, Zurich and Berne in 1802 in an instant. The most impressive feature of the scene was the total absence of anything that seemed material. Looking over the city one saw nothing but lights, as if the sky during peace with the Swiss republic, and Saxony, in 1806, without a declaration. Prussia occupied Hanover in 1806 without warn-ing, and began the Austrian war in 1866 the day the declaration was issued. Portugal had been reversed, and yet even these lights looked more like the reflections of stars in water than the result of burning good the day the declaration was issued. Fortugal in 1816 marched from Brazil, its colony, into the Plate colony of Spain without a declaration, and in 1826 Spain invaded Portugal without this formality. In 1827 the battle of Navarino, in 1831 the allied operations against King Miguel and in 1840 the defeat of Mehemet All were all carried or without a declaration. in water than the result of bothing good gas which we pay for by the foot according to a meter with an abnormally developed imagination. Every structure in the city seemed to have been eliminated, and the presence of light, the very thing which was supposed to make the building visible, ob-literated them.

About 9 o'clock a frightful storm set in, and if a delightful view of the city can be gained from the monument that place is anything but an enviable one for the timid during a thunderstorm. The thunder seemed to be manufactured right inside its mults and the nucles was as close and hand Ten years ago France and China fought for months and never declared war, and England and France got into a hot diplomatic controversy over the "pacific blockade" which France tried to establish over Formosa as seemed to be manufactured right inside its walls, and the peals were so close and loud that the nervous members of the party were agonized with terror. The lightning played around and danced with little sput-terings and cracklings from point to point on the lightning proof sides. No Fourth of July fireworks ever exceeded in gorgecus delicacy the pyrotechnic display on the mon-ument. The view of the lights of the city was cut off by the clouds which clung around the huge obelisk below the summit, and the was cut off by the clouds which clung around the huge obelisk below the summit, and the rain descended in sheets from clouds that we looked down upon. It was an inspiring sight that induced even the most presaic man in the crowd to drop into poetry when he was not clinging to some railing or projection for fancied protection against the fury of the storm.

Where Rain is Unknown.

There is, perhaps, no more curious place on the Pacific seaboard than Iquique. It on the Facilic sensorid than Apulac. A stands in a region where rain has never been known to fall, and where, as was re-marked by Darwin, when he visited fullque in ~1835, the inhabitants live like people on heard ship. These number about 14,090, nearly all connected with the staple industry of the port due to the development of the nearly all connected with the staple industry of the port, due to the development of the nitrate industry on the adjacent pampas. The rain gauges at Lima, close to the Pacific, record absolutely no rainfall. There are several parts of the earth where rain never fails. Such are the Sahara, or great desert of Africa, and considerable tracts of Arabia, Syria, Persia, Thibet and Mongolia in the old world, while in South America the rain-less districts comprise narrow strips on the shores of Peru, Bolivia and Chill, and on again and killed the ugly animal. The deer remnining on the spot where it had fallen, Nixson went up and found it dead. There was not a wound upon it that could have caused death, and it is believed that the doe was scared to death, the wildcat having leaped upon her from some tree as she was feeding. The wildcat weighed nearly fifty pounds, and it is one of the largest ever killed in western Pennsylvania.

well as the French attempt to make rice a contraband of war. England held, as . 88 did we, that there was enough of war to enforce her enlistment and our neutrality acts, but not enough for a blockade or the seizure of rice cargoes on the high seas. We were at war with France "by sea" for two years a century ago without ever mak-ing a general decisration of war. In short, in more than two wars out of three the first In more than two wars out of the the me blow is struck before war is declared, and this practice enforces the necessity of always being prepared. If we ever have a war our first warning may be a hostile fleet in New York harbor.

New York harbor. Deer Scared to Death. Jeremiah Nixson of Indian Run, Pa., had an exciting and novel exprience in the Wil-cox woods one day last week. He was trying to get track of a bear that had been maraud-ing in that vicinity for a fortnight. He had failed to get any trace of the bear, and was on his way home, when suddenly a doe bounded from the bushes, bleating with pain and terror. Clinging to one of the doc's shoulders, and trying to claw her throat open with one of its long, sharp claws, was a big wildcat. The deer was running at full speed, but Nixson fired at the wildcat and hit it. The deer ran a few steps and fell. The wildcat left her and bounded toward Nixson, who fired again and killed the ugly animal. The deer remaining on the spot where it had fallen. and terror.
