Yesterday afternoon witnessed a most auspicious opening of the championship base ball season in Omaha for 1906, and as a consequence the game is suspended at a very high altitude.

The weather was charming, the crowd large, and the game brilliant, exciting and well played, especially on the part of the Walsh family.

There was a good deal of apprehension felt during the morning, owing to the ominous aspect of the weather. The sky was veiled with leaden clouds, and there was a humid drizzle that suggested rain.

The average fan was on needles. He couldn't endure the thought of having the opening game postponed for rain, and many a sorrowful glance was cast heavenward during the dragging hours of the morning.

But, for the nonce, Old Jupiter Fate was gracious. He had frowned merely to give the cranks a scare, and instead of pulling the string to the celestial bath he got a hustle on about lunch time and shoved all the threatening nebula off over the horizon, leaving an expanse of sky of an Italian hue over spreading the budding earth, amidst a deluge of spring sunshine warm enough to bake a hen.

But it was base ball weather, and almost instantly the city took on a most lively and exhilarating air. People came out on the streets like the little blue bee in a field of blooming clover, and there was much rejoicing and congratulation and a scurrying to and fro, with handkerchiefs flying as a gratifying point.

There is where the parade formed, a glittering pageant, composed of the Odd Fellows and a long line of headquarters, containing the dragging hours of the morning. But, for the nonce, Old Jupiter Fate was gracious. He had frowned merely to give the cranks a scare, and instead of pulling the string to the celestial bath he got a hustle on about lunch time and shoved all the threatening nebula off over the horizon, leaving an expanse of sky of an Italian hue over spreading the budding earth, amidst a deluge of spring sunshine warm enough to bake a hen.

From the moment the long line was in motion the whole metropolis was fairly beset itself with the glories of the national and yet could not distinguish anything amidst the marvellous panorama that swayed upon the air but base hits, runs and outs.

The motormen, the newboys, backblocks and cheap house hatters, in fact, almost everybody gave everything that goes by to discuss the Walsh family chances with the husky brown-clad cohorts from Quincy.

OUT AT THE PARK.

By 3 o'clock the grand old park presented a stirring picture. The blue sky, sunshine and starting grass made a background to the study that was entrancing indeed. The stands by the water side, with their spring bonnets and vernal raiment of hundreds of ladies, all of which showed what a hold the glorious sport is getting upon the hearts and minds of the fair sex, were ornamented with a souvenir picture and a bouquet as the passed in at the gate. On either side the bleachers were jammed with eager spectators, and together the throng was a magnificent one.

At 3:30 Mayor Bemis, with his bonnet in hand, made his appearance in the open space in front of the grand old building, where well chosen words welcomed the Illinoisans, and then after a paragraph or two of advice and encouragement, he turned to toss a brand new ball to Umpire Ward and the game was ready for taping.

And it was a great one, in harmony with all the inaugural commitments, and better than all, Omaha won.

Every man played good ball, even unto little Willie O'Brien, who as yet has had no opportunity to show his prowess. His limbs, or get the corns out of his hair. Bill is fresh from the farm, where he has been grazing through the hyperborean tundras. Sunday afternoon, however, the Quincy team were also on hand, but somehow or other they became lost in the shuffle. When the engine started blowing its baggers and other noisy vegetable organs over the velvety outfield, they were slicing the found atmosphere into railroad sandwiches but expending the brown in wild and aimless flights about the wamp and wool that Louis Napoleon Balsz was weaving across the rubber plate.

When the battle was over but eight of the Quince had succeeded in skating round the bases, while no less than fifteen of the Grasshopper Ulrich picked up his war club and strode to the plate. His face was full of emotion and facet tobacco. The populace clapped its hands and topped its lungs, feverishly expected security to do something, and he did. He rapped a warm one down to McCormack. Mack made an erratical smatch at it with his left hand, and then his right. Then he attempted to jump on the pitcher, and when he did finally connect and hurl it over to Peek-a-Boo Veach, the Grasshopper was presenting his feathers on the bag.

Seeing that the Grasshopper was likewise sent one down to McCormack, and in his maddening ambition to atone for his first blunder, Mack threw this one clear over Peek-a-Boo's face. The Grasshopper swarmed home, while Old Hutch reached third.

Manager Brackett arose hastily from his seat on the bench. A foreboding had pre-empted his theatrical department and his mug was filled with pain. He looked as if he would like to go and choke himself and then when he was born dead.

Colonel Shaffer was not so fortunate as his predecessors. He was blotted out at first. But Willie O'Brien was coming.

WILLIE MADE A SINGLE.

Probably next to himself Willie is the strongest evidence and the brightest example upon living of what may be done by an ambitious young man when he tries.

He made two successive jumps on the bag, and missed it both times. Then he struck a Kansas City attitude, looked at Nichols and seemed to be contemplating, of course this was all wrong. A base ball player never contemplates, because he has nothing to contemplate with. But he soaked here. It was a regular old Hutch hit of the game, and Old Hutch and Nichols were extinguished and the Quince came in.
