The occupant sits astride the "bottom" of the boat, much as one does the scadile of a bicycle, and propels himself with his legs, which are incased in rubber shoes and leggings, and on which there are fins- with which the propelling is done. The oc- cupant is on view from the walat up and glides along in the water with apparent ease and grace. The invention is a new one, and intended for sporting purposes mainly. The trip was made on a wager that it would be impossible to pass through Heil Gaie in the preomatic boats with safety. To show how thoroughly practical the in- vention is, Miss Green determined to be ong of the party. The start was made from off the foot of One Hundred and Twentieth street, and down the stream the party paddled with their feet. On the way down the party got in between two sound steamers and the wash they received was strong. The little boats, however, rode the waves lasted up by the steamers like ducks and did not ship any water. The party made its way through the Gates and down the East river, to Willie's float, at the foot of East Eighty-ninth street, without mishap, and were received by a large con- gregation of friends and sightseers, who welcomed them with cheers. The outing boat weighs from fifteen to twerty pounds and can be carried, when not inflated, as an ordinary hand grip, or strapped on the shoulders as a knapsack, it contains four air-tight compartments, any one of which is sufficient, in case of
