A RETREAT FOR SUICIDES.

The Very Novel Idea Wrought Out by an Inventive St. Louis Genius.

SHUFFLING OFF SURROUNDED BY LUXURY.

The Suicide Enabled to End His Career Quietly, Decently and Respectably—Every Known Means for the Job Fiaiced at His Disposal.

"Look here," he said, pointing to a certain corner, "here are a dozen suicides ready to be taken care of in this morning's paper. There's scarcely a day that there isn't a list of half a dozen more. Some of them are harrowing in details, some of them are not, but they are all of a character to increase the sorrow of the mourning relatives. It wouldn't be so if they could go off quietly, be reported as having died suddenly and shipped back to their homes, or to the homes of their relatives, as if they had died of some other disease. Now, I have a scheme which is at once practical and humane, which would result in saving a man who was really despondent from the usual course of things. It would also result in demonstrating to a great many, would-be suicides that after all there is something in life to live for, no matter what the circumstances which surround them. I never was a man or woman who had trouble or sorrow that some one else did not have a greater one. I have studied this question a great many times, and I have seen many despondent people go to compare notes. I never speak of my views on the subject, because I have a wholesome dread of being taken for a madman. I have a scheme which I think it would pay to put into execution, and right here in St. Louis is the place, because it is so central and so accessible to the people of the whole country. Come into my private office and I will show you my plans."

The reporter followed, wondering what would be the result of the gentleman's plea if he was ever brought under a charge of murder, not that his manner or conversation betokened any unsoundness of mind, but that the idea was so decidedly unusual. Slowly the gentleman pulled a lot of papers from a drawer. At a glance it could be seen that they were plans for a building erected in the city of St. Louis. The drawing was somewhat amateurish. There wasn't the precision about them that there would have been had they been prepared by a professional draftsman. "I drew them myself," was said in explanation. "I have always had some idea of architecture and put it to use in this connection. I didn't want to let a professional man into my plans until such time, if it ever comes, as I may be able to go ahead. I have here, as you see, the plans for a five-story building, which I have named the 'Retreat for Suicides.' It is to be located on the corner of Clark and 17th streets. The building will be a perfect model of modern architecture. It will be a place where a man or woman who is despondent and who has no other recourse can go and live for a few days. LITTLE AH GUEY.

The Married Heir of Chinatown Slips with a Handsome Man. Little Ah Guey has gone wrong. She was the neatest woman in the San Diego Chinatown, and had the smallest feet. She was an American child, but she had married the son of the new woman. She spoke English fluently, and Sundays easily led others of her race in prayer.

Ah Guey was married two years ago in San Francisco to Long Kee, an educated Chinese, who also wore American clothes and smoked cigars and cigarettes. They met in the morning, and she was very much attracted by his appearance. He was a handsome man, and she was very much attracted by his appearance. PASSING OF THE HORSE.

Progress of a Revolution in Modern Means. The cause assigned for the failure of a street car company in Denver, says the Chicago Record, was that the use of the bicycle so reduced the number of its passengers that it was unable to meet its current expenses. The superintendent of a Chicago railroad doing a large suburban business said the other day that he had serious doubts whether the road had to meet with that of the bicycle and that the summer traffic was very seriously reduced by the use of the two-wheeled roadster. It is also claimed that the bicycle is very seriously impaired by the large and increasing use of the bicycle as a means of locomotion. A country physician said recently that while formerly he kept three horses he now keeps only one. While this is true, the scope of the bicycle is being enlarged, and other means of locomotion employing either small gas engines or electric motors are being introduced into the scientific papers. A man in Colorado has invented a carriage using a gas engine, which, it is claimed, will enable one to make the distance from the city to the country in seventy-five hours. Whether this be verified or not, it cannot be denied that methods of travel are about to undergo a great change as to that from the old stage coach to the railway carriage, and that the bicycle is the first step, although a long one, toward such transition.
