Christina had also reached a crists in her own life. The feeling between Jamie Lauder and herself was that eager love which begins with love, and a week after Sophy's visit Jamie had found his opportunity to teach Christina the secret of her own heart. Sitting on the lonely rocks, with the moonlit sea at their feet, they had told each other how ETNA HOUSE (EUROPEAN), N. W. COR 13th and Dodge. he had been with the boats and her mind also was full of Androw's revelation; she wante1 be alone to realize all that it meant. the interview was cold and constrained, and Jamie was offended, and finally went away quite out of temper. He kicked the stones n the path out of his way, muttering angrily

"I'm no caring! I'm no caring! The moral pride o' that Binnies is ridic'lus!. One would require to be a vera saint to come within sight o' them." This cloud was, however, but a passing one, and the next few weeks went time does go, when love and hope brighten every hour. The fishing season was unusually good, the men were making money and the women had Christina's marriage, and marriage presents to talk about. Every now and then some relative sent her a piece of home-spun linen, or a quilt, or some china, I hae and each article was examined and discussed y all the wives and maids in Pittencraigie. Christina and her mother had no objections to this kind of popularity, nor was Jamie averse to the good natured freedom. Andrew's love affairs were not as promis ing. Sophy came less and less to the village, she said "her aunt had gone to Perth, for a bit of a holiday, and the shop couldna be left to tak' care o' itself," and the excuse seemed to be a good one. At any rate it satisfied Andrew. He made a deal of during the fishing season, and was evidently to Christina, preparing IOF change. He went frequently to Edinburgh and capability so dear to the women of a and on his return always gave her a glan household. He had on his kirk suit, and full of the assurance of success. And for Christina thought as he sat down by the open window how much handsomer he looked with Sophy; then there was a sudden change

"You'll and Christina noticed that he often came back she asked from Largo with a heavy step and a grav face. Occasionally he admitted he had been ther?" "sairly disappointed"-Sophy had gone away The for a week's rest, or she had a headache and bairn is still sick, and mother will stay by it till the night turns." the excuses were numerous and varied, and the excuses were numerous and varies, in the scriptures as the Salt sea), is over finally they began to cause a sad and fearing wonder even in Andrew's trusting heart. One morning in early October Jamie got "He said he was going to the fishing. He'll has caught the boat, or he would has been back here again."

He was white through all the tan of wind and sea and sun, and the sweat of suffering stood in great beads on his pallid face and brow. Christina lifted a towyl just ironed and wiped it away, and he said feebly; "Thank you, I'll go wee'. I can think no mair, I can suffer no mair, till I get strength."

So Christina opened the door of his room and he tottered in, swaying like a drunken man, and threw blmzelf upon his bed. Five minutes afterward she stepped softly to his side. He was sunk in deep sleep, fathoms below the tide of sorrow, whose waves and billows had gone over him.

"Thanks be to the Mercifull" she whispered. "When the sorrow is too great, then He giveth His beloved, sleep." (To be continued Tuesday.)

Is there anything to gain by word or forth a locked tin box, and opening it, displayed to Christina a hoard of sovereigns and Bank of England bills. The money in his pocket was added to this treasured store; the flooring and drawers replaced and then with-

If I should go to the fishing some night and never come back, it would be the same as if it went down with me-not a soul but myrei' knowing it was there. But I'll be happier now, for if that thing happens, you must take the money out o' hiding and give Sophy Traill one-half o' it, and the other half is for mother and yourself. And, above a' things, I charge you never to name to mortal creature the whereabouts o' the hiding."

"Your words are in my heart, Andrew, and they'll never pass my lips." "That's enough o' the siller then. I have had a happy day, Christina. Sophy was wi' me to Edinburgh, and the heauty o' her! And the sweet innocence and lovesomeness o' her ways! I bought her a ring wi' a shining stone in it, and a gold brocch, and a bonnie piece o' white muslin, with the lace for the trimming o' it, and the joy of the lassic set me laughing wi' delight! "Ay. I see the mark o' 11. The state of the s fittence and enthusiasm. "Fill tak' your advice and go tell Sophy," he said. "The asked is a base provided the stars and my hame and my ain folk has grown into my life as the seat and the stars and my hame and my ain folk has grown and if she'll love me better for the news, I'm that far gone in love wi' for the news, I'm that far gone in love wi' her, that I must win her by any means possible."

He went on this errand of love with a light heart, and then Christina sought her mother. "Andrew is golug to gle me a silken gown for my welding," she cried, joyfully, and the two women spent the morting in talking over the most desirable color, and the necessity of having so fine a garment made in Largo. After the noon meal Janet Binnie took her knitting and went to tell her neighbors about the silk gown, and Christina did the ironing, and then she sang a verse or two of "Hunting Tower" and then she sang a verse or two of "Hunting Tower" and then she sang again.
She did not expect Andrew home until the creating. He would likely have his tea with Sophy and walk back afterward. But in midder the troning, and the stophy and walk back afterward. The water is very deep, even at the shores. In some spots the depth measures 160 feet, in others 750 and more. In the northeast and northwest the shores are flat and swampy; the mountains of Safed approach the lake on that was a cry of terror, and she went to him and kissed him and murmured, she the mountains of Safed approach the lake on the north; in the west we have the hills of El-Hamma and Hattin. The volcanic plateau of Jordan begins in the east; it is distin-guished for many dead craters; its greatest height is called Hermon, and it wears an elernal snow-cap. Palms that bring forth no fruit, papyrus plants and oleander flourish in the neighborhood of the shores. The stones at the edge of the water are literally cov-ered with turtles, some of which grow over a foot and a half long. Ducks are plentiful in some parts; in others the pelican holds forth in large numbers.
