Democrata Protest Against a Bribery Nominated Candidate.

WILL REPUDIATE CONVENTION'S ACTION

Evidence in Hand that Frank Johnson's Nomination Was Bought and Paid For in the Convention Hall Last Saturday.

The democrats of Omaha, South Omaha and Douglas county are in open revolt. Unhesitatingly they declare that they will never submit to the methods adopted in the convention last Saturday afternoon, whereby Frank B. Johnson was nominated as a candidate for the office of clerk of the district

It is now positively known that one-third of the votes which Johnson received were bought and paid for in cash. Of the South Omaha delegation it is a well known fact that the sale and delivery of the votes were made right in the convention hall.

When the convention convened Saturday afternoon the South Omaha delegation was almost solid for Coe. As it progressed, a check, signed by Frank B Johnson for $380. was written at a table on the platform. This check was drawn on the Midland bank, Johnson's own bank, and turned over in payment for the delivery of the South Omaha vote. The man to whom it was given, and who is well known, did not have the courage to present it for payment. Late Saturday evening a number of the members of the gang got together, raised the money, took up the check, and the amount called for on its face was distributed among the men who had sold themselves, body and soul, to the combine.

Democrats have become aware of the high-handed bribery, and as a result they have decided to repudiate the action of the con-vention so far as the nomination of the clerk of the district court is concerned.

The citizens of South Omaha, without regard to party, are making preparations for an indignation meeting to be held Wednesday evening at Young Men's Institute hall, to protest against and denounce the action of the South Omaha delegation to the recent democratic county convention

IN THE FARTHEST SEVENTH WARD. Candidates Address a Small Gathering of Faithful Republicans. Twenty-two able-bodied yeomen of the Seventh ward, not counting George Stryker and J. Whiskers Eller, assembled in mass meeting at Hibbeler's hall at Forty-fourth and Leavenworth streets last night to listen to the discussion of the issues of the campaign. The twenty-third man was expected and President Stryker didn't like to open the o'clock it was decided to run the show through with the audience shy one man.

The first bout was between Candidates Taylor and Ambier, who want to represent the Seventh ward in the council. Mr. Taylor opened with a careful statement to the effect that he was an old time resident of the ward and had the increases of the council. and had the interests of the city at heart. Mr. Ambler followed and told his hearers that he would simply be a peach of a council-man if he got a chance. He insisted that he didn't want to say anything against Mr. Taylor, and then went on to hint about a man aylor, and then went on to hint about a man who had commenced suit against the city for damages for the grading of Leavenworth street when he was really benefited. Taylor retorted and said Ambler was not without guile, and there promised to be a scrap and would have been if there had been people enough present to divide into sides on the issue.

Justice Baldwin talked on his candidacy for colles judge, Colonel Mel Redfield told all dicut his chances for county clerk, Judge Scott made a speech—same old speech—and John Westberg closed the meeting with a request that the Seventh warders give him a paid the money in good faith and should not lift in his race for the nomination for city comptroller. It was nearly midnight when all the speakers had been given a chance and the club adjourned for a week.

Broatch Named the Delegates. The meeting of the Fourth ward republicans was held last night at Washington hall. J. G. Kuhn presided and appointed F. C. O'Halloran as secretary. There was no business before the club, so W. J. Broatch was called upon for a speech. In a short ad-dress he announced his candidacy for mayor and briefly outlined his policy if elected. He was followed by James H. Powers, candi-date for police judge, and W. A. Foster, candidate for justice of the peace, after which those present adjourned to meet in caucus to nominate delegates for the city convention. W. J. Broatch was given authority to name the delegates. The motion was carried, and, after a short interval, he handed in the following names: W. B. Hayward, K. S. Fisher, J. J. Brander, Frank B. Kennard, F. C. O'Halleran, Frank Plank, F. C. Brownlee and J. T. Wertz.

The club was then addressed by Robert Duncar, candidate for councilman, and by Gustave Anderson, candidate for police judge. Eighth Ward Republicans.

The Eighth Ward Republican club held ite regular meeting at Twenty-fourth and Cuming streets last night. The attendance was silm and made up for the most part of candidates. Short speeches were delivered by Jacobson, Anderson, Allen, Leonard, Saunders, Furnas, Lillie, Wilcox, Cadet Taylor Danish Americans Meet.

The Danish-American Citizens' club held a meeting yesterday afternoon, at which forty new members were enrolled. Several good speeches were made by the members, all of which were in favor of good govern-ment in city and county affairs. The next mesting will be held next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

In the Interests of Humanity. Mr. J. C. Padgett, editor of the Courier, Council Grove, Kan., writes: "I ke and don't see how any well regulated family can afford to be without it. The remedy will do all, and more than is claimed for it. will do an, and more than is claimed for it. This statement is not made in the interests of Chamberlain, but for humanity in general." When you have a cough or cold, or if your children are troubled with croup or whooping cough, give it a trial. You will find it most excellent.

Edwin Milton Royle's play,"Mexico," which by reason of its newness, has not yet attained that measure of popularity which the future surely has in store for it, had its first representation in Omaha at the Creighton theater last night before a large and highly appreciative audience.

In this, the work of his maturer genlus Mr. Royle has departed radically from the type of drama and character which he employed so successfully in his earlier play, "Friends." He has gone for his materials and his local coloring to that land which, lying close to the southern borders of our own, is yet pratically to the people of the United States an undiscovered country. Entered and humiliated fifty years ago by a hostile army from our greater republic, Mexico, despite the war which Mr. Royle has used as a background for his play, remains for the most part unvisited and unknown. The glories of its wonderful past are cele-brated in the romantic histories of Mr. Prescott; recent fiction, newspaperr and other, has depicted the present physical characteristics of the country and the moral attitudes of the people, both being apparently hot and vol-canic. Mr. Royle would have earned the gratitude of the theater going public by putting the plow of the pioneer playwright into this fertile and fallow field, even if he had done no more, but he would appear to have made a wise and judicious selection from the wealth of materials at his command, and to have combined them deftly into one of the most enjoyable plays of recent years.

Authorities may differ as to the justice of the war with Mexico; there can be no divergence of opinion as to the heroism of the men who participated in it on the one side and the other. The story of the play under consideration has been sufficiently de tailed heretofore. It abounds in picturesque incidents, stirring episodes, ardent love scenes and powerful and well-contrived climaxes. "Mexico" is a play which carries audiences with it irresistibly, even at times to the white heat of enthusiasm. While the horrors of war are rather suggested than depicted, the piece breathes the very atmosphere of the strife of an invading army and a people foredoomed to defeat. The threads of comedy, which the author has skillfully woven into the fabric of the narrative, only serve to accentuate the lurid background of conflict. Certain irregularities, which at present mar the perfect symmetry of Mr. Royle's creation, and which are surprisingly few in number considered with the magnitude of the double task of the author-actor, and the comparatively few times the piece has been presented publicly, will wear away soon, and "Mexico," as it is better will come into its rightful place among the plays of the decade. As Captain Shields, the impetuous South Carolinian, whose adventures in love and was have much to do with the plot of the play Mr. Royle achieved a distinct success. He is Mr. Royle achieved a distinct success. He is a soldierly figure in the uniform of the period, and his finished method of acting was never more in evidence. This virtue seems at times to run into the fault of over-refinement. If he appears wanting in fire when fire is called for, if, in short, he fails through repression to fulfill entirely the ideal which he believed as author, said on in the mind. he himself as author sets up in the mind, the impersonation as a whole is an excellent one. No one surely has a better right than Mr. Royle to set forth his own conception of the hero of his own play, and if he presents it as consistently and unswervingly as he did last night, he is entitled to high praise. It is not too much to say that his beautiful and talented wife, Selena Fetter, emphatically carried off the honors of the evening by ally carried off the honors of the evening by her fine performance in the role of Jovita. While it cannot yet be, in the nature of things, so polished a work of art as her Marguerite Otto, in "Friends," there are rare possibilities in it of growth for such abilities as Mrs. Royle's. Mr. Henderson surpasses the expectations even of his friends by his vivid and earnest impersonation of the rejected Mexican lover. Those who have previously Mexican lover. Those who have previously judged him by his musical ability and his somewhat coloriess work in "Friends" will revise their prophecies of his future after seeing him in this animated and difficult
