JOBS THAT FATTEN GRAVES. Men Who Follow Occasional Which Hasten Death.

That any man who earns his daily bread by the sweat of his brow should voluntarily impose a death sentence on himself does not seem worthy of credence. Yet many a toiler knows that the trade he pursues means certain death to him.

The fact has often been commented upon that a greater number of people work at night in New York at the present time than would have constituted the entire population of the city a few years ago.

The most common complaints among those who are employed at night are consumption, pneumonia, the grip and other ailments. It is not generally known that a temperature is alarmingly great. On the hottest day in summer they are obliged to wear thick clothing while they are hard at work to protect themselves against the biting winds of winter.

Another class of workmen who suffer in much the same way are the manufacturers of certain kinds of paint. The paint, which includes poisonous arsenic and lead, give out certain fumes which act upon the lungs and throat and pervade the entire system.
