ARGUE FOR THE SUGAR BOUNTY

Money for the Purpose Appropriated by Congress Has Been Held Up by a Subaltern Executive Officer.

WASHINGTON, April 23.-(Special Tele-@ram.)-Two notable legal arguments were made today in the supreme court in the sugar bounty cases, and both on the same nide, by General C. F. Manderson and Joseph R. Chuate of the New York bar, Just previous to efeeing his argument for the gov-Assistant Attorney General Whitmey told the court that he would be followed by a representative of the Sugar trust, an institution which had wound its way about the halls of congress and had almost strangled legislation. This gave Manderson his opportunity, and for nearly two hours he held the attention of the court in a masterful manner, showing not only a broad knowledge of his subject, which he had argued before Comptroller Bowler and Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle, but a wide grass of the many legal phases involved, questions of consequential interpretation at once teresting and novel. General Manderson stated that instead of representing the Sugar trust, he represented 5,000 claimants to bounty which was rightfully theirs, but which was held up by an underling of government, these claimants living in twentyfour states and territories. Not a dollar he said, would go to the trust, and sarcast-cally referred to this misrepresentation as a long line of others of same tenor made by clerks of the administration. He stated that he represented a constituency occupying fields of the south and the beet the cane helds of the south and the best fields of the porth, stretching from the fer-tile prairies of Nebraska to the blossoming

Until After Election. WASHINGTON, April 23.-There is strong possibility that the delegates from the territories who have the interests of the statehood bills in charge will not attempt to scure congressional action on their bills until the next session of congress. Delegates Catron and Murphy have been making a sion of canvass of the house since the New Mexico erally. and Arizona bilis were reported, and they have encountered certain obstacles which lead them to believe that the bills will command more votes in the next session than during the present one. Moreover, the efforts of the republican leaders to bring about an early adjournment have to be taken into onsideration, and the delegates do not care between the house and senate when congress
