The witness admitted that this was the case. This course had not been taken by the advice of the attorney general.

The state objected to this question, adding that the advice of the attorney general could only be shown by the written opinion of that official.

This objection was sustained and then the defense moved to withdraw from the jury and strike from the record the documents and evidence, covering the records of the treasurer's office and the monthly statements made by Bartley.

The objection was overruled and the records of the treasurer's office and the monthly statements made by Bartley were read to the jury.

At the hour of the noon adjournment the state had given no indication of resting its case.

When court convened in the afternoon Bookkeeper Willet was called by the state to testify to the balance book kept in the treasurer's office by himself, after which the pages of the book hearing the account of the deposits kept in the Omaha National bank during April and May, 1895, were read to the jury.

a note pros. to the first and second counts of the information, these relating to the embezzlement of the warrant, and the state would elect to stand on the six counts charging the embezzlement of the money.

LINCOLN NOTES. The Bunn Tea company, doing business at 225 South Eleventh street, executed four chattel mortgages this morning as follows: George Barker, trustee, $4,000; deposits, $4,507.66; loans and discounts, $6,524.18. William Leary is cashier of the institution.

He also issued an invitation to attend the meeting of the Tammany society at its hall in New York on July 1, and also to make an address on that occasion. The invitation was declined by the governor.

NEW PLAN OF DEFENSE. Mr. Mahoney then announced that the defense would file a motion to direct a verdict for the defendant, and that he would require a little time to prepare a formal motion and to produce authorities in support of the same.

Mr. Mahoney returned the jury was directed to retire and he outlined his argument, stating that the money shown in the account of the bank had been credited to the bank and not money in any form. This statement had reference to the testimony of the bank officials showing that in all dealings in connection with the sale of the warrant, the increasing of Bartley's account from the sale of the warrant and the proceeds from the sale of the warrant and the payment of the warrant by check, not a check as passed, the whole transaction being merely an interchange of credits on the bank's books.

Mr. Mahoney read from the information to the jury the charges against the defendant with embezzling money and money and the article embraced as anything except money.

He read from the section of the statute relating to the embezzlement, showing that it was a crime to take any money or property of another person and convert it to one's own use.

State House Officials Indist that the Investigating Committee Has Made a Gross Blunder in Its Hasty Procedure.

LINCOLN, June 14.—(Special.)—Shortly after the legislative investigating committee began its work the question arose as to whether the experts should be allowed to take the original books from the treasurer's office, or make notations or changes of any sort on the pages.

The treasurer, Messrs. Kelley, Stiger & Co., is consulted by the officials and clerks that in addition to these corrections and alterations, the experts have been altogether too free in the use of a rubber stamp, and in the use of a pen, showing that items have been overhailed by the accountants.
