JOHNNY'S FIRST BICYCLE.

True Story of the Way He Earned It.

Johnny Barker's father was opposed to bicycles. Johnny lived out in the country on a big dairy farm and longed very much to possess a "bike," but his father had been so annoyed by bad city boys riding out to his place, stealing his watermelons and robbing his orchard that he had conceived a bitter dislike for wheels and wheelmen in general. All Johnny's pleadings had utterly failed to overcome his father's prejudice.

One day Johnny's sick city cousin came out to the farm on a long visit for the benefit of his health and brought his bicycle with him. Johnny was delighted and immediately took advantage of the long-sought opportunity to learn to ride. As the weeks went by his cousin's health improved very slowly, and so Johnny got a chance to ride the wheel a great deal himself, and in a short time became quite proficient in its use.

How the people paused on their way to work that morning to see the halting little chap pound madly over the rough cobblestones! But Johnny saw none of their amazement. He did not even see the big policeman who shouted to him to stop—a trifle soon before his eyes and his heart beat so loud he could hear nothing else. With his eyes glued to the front wheel he tore fiercely around the corners, regardless of the danger he exposed himself to by collision.

The sweet poultice of every portion of his small anatomy was his face was red as fanned as he wildly rode into the city where lived the first customer to be served. At breakfast speed he tore up that narrow thoroughfare and almost dashed about with joy, exhausted as he was, when he saw his father's wagon standing in front of the house. The customer was about to take the milk when Johnny dashed up and half fell, half staggered off the wheel.

Little Johnny had been the best rider in all the country round. If I were to give Johnny's real name some of you boys and girls would be surprised, for today he is one of the best known long distance riders in America.

chap, and he couldn't sit still a minute. He was out in the narrow aisle between the cross seats before the train started, and from there he discovered a little girl, aged about 2, who was sitting with her mother in the front cross seat on the same side of the car. When he spied her he darted back into his own section and then put out again, and looked around the end of the seats ahead at her, and in a minute they were playing peekaboo and having the greatest time you ever heard of.

"There was a very tall man with a gray beard sitting in the front cross seat on the left. He got out at one of the stations, and going by the rear door of the car, and so walking down the narrow aisle between the cross seats. Just as he started the little chap started out to scold the little girl. He didn't pay any attention to the tall man with the gray beard, he didn't know anything about him, he didn't realize his presence any more than if he'd been in Kamschatka; he ran into one of his legs, but that didn't make any difference. He gave it no more thought than if he'd run into a tree, playing in the woods.

There is nothing particularly alluring in the title of nitrogen dioxide to the seeker after amusement, but until he tries it the reader cannot realize how much innocent fun can be had from preparing and experimenting with this curious compound.

ers largely into animal and vegetable compounds. The structure of such compounds is maintained by the continuous renewal involved in animal and vegetable life. When life ceases the nitrogen at once begins to free itself and rapidly promotes decay.

IS A LAWYER AT SIXTEEN.

Oscar Beck, the Boy Attorney, Pleads His First Case. The town of Harvey, Ill., is just now enjoying the distinction of having the youngest attorney in the state of Illinois. Oscar Beck, 16 years old, is the possessor of a $2 bill, which he is having framed as a memento of his first case. He is preparing for a legal career in the office of Justice I. P. Morgan, and his services were sought by a Harvey man who was sued by his Blue Island landlord for $80 on rent due. The young attorney immediately accepted the case and carried the matter through the devious and circuitous ways of the law with consummate skill. The court rendered a verdict of $35.50, and congratulated the youthful advocate.

PHATLE OF THE YOUNGSTERS.

A good story is told by the Jewish Messenger of a number of boys who were playing one day in front of an Episcopal church. The pastor suddenly came out of his parsonage and told the boys to be quiet in front of the Lord's house. "That is all right, mister," said the boys. "The Lord is not here today. He's down the street at the Jewish synagogue."

On a signboard in front of a dye shop in Chicago, Ill., is the inscription "Satin dyed here." A small boy who saw it for the first time went home and joyfully told his mother that the devil was dead.

A boy had been up for an examination in scripture, had failed utterly, and the relations between him and the examiner had become somewhat strained. The latter asked him if there were any text in the whole Bible he could quote. He pondered and then reported: "And Judas went out and hanged himself, and there any other verse you know in the Bible?" the examiner asked.

There is besides a lesson to be learned from the peculiar properties of this compound. It is composed, as its name implies, of nitrogen and iodine. Nitrogen is a most profuse element in nature. It is very inert. It refuses utterly to combine with some elements and very reluctantly enters into compounds with others.

WHEN MAMMA WAS A GIRL.

When mamma was a girl she came to Omaha on a big lumbering stage coach, and the best part of the journey according to her ideas, was when it grew so cold they wrapped a big buffalo robe around her and brother and some gave her some nice red apples, which they ate under the robe, playing it was a tent.

At Council Bluffs they stopped all night, and the next day crossed the Missouri river in a ferry boat, no railroads at that time running west of Des Moines, Ia. One morning grandma saw mamma for milk, and as she was turning the corner she met three Indians, all painted. She stopped long enough to throw her pail of milk toward them and then ran back to where she had bought the milk, and running into the best room gave as far that the day as she could squeeze. It took all the persuasion of which grandma was able to get her out, as she thought she might see the Indians.
