

MANUFACTURE OF "STAFF"

How the Staff is Made Which is to Cover Exposition Buildings.

TAKES ON RARE AND BEAUTIFUL FORMS

Models Must First Be Made and Then Plaster Casts Are Made in Plaster.

The making of staff work, or stucco, which is to form the outer covering and decoration of the beautiful buildings at the exposition, is a process which has been chiseled out of the most marbles and other building stone, is a process which is little understood by the general public, but which is of more than passing interest to those who have an opportunity of witnessing the many operations involved in turning out the completed casts.

The contracts for the staff work on the large exposition buildings in the main court are nearly all in the hands of Smith & Eastman, experienced contractors in this line, who did a large amount of the work on the World's fair buildings and who have done similar work on many of the largest buildings in this country, prominent among them being the headquarters building of the State, War and Navy departments in Washington, one of the largest structures of the kind in the world. These contractors have two shops, one just outside the exposition grounds near Sherman avenue and Pinkney street, the other in the main court building, inside the main court. In these two shops the casts are made which are to transform the huge frames being erected about the Lagoon into a mass of beauty, and which with all the lavishness which characterized the most stately architectural piles of the ancient world.

The shop outside the grounds is devoted entirely to the modelers and pattern makers, who prepare the patterns and molds from which the casts placed upon the buildings are made. These casts are all made in the shop in the main court, where the modeling shop the latter part of last week found the workmen engaged in making some of the patterns for the staff work which will be placed on the buildings. The ornamentation of this building is not only very ornate and elaborate, but it is decidedly unique and original. Architect Cass Gilbert of St. Paul outside the grounds, who designed and originated its decoration. In so doing he utilized the vegetable and animal life of an agricultural community and adapted it to the architecture of the exposition. The character of decoration which will be most attractive as well as artistic. It necessitates, however, on the part of the staff workers a tremendous amount of new work in making the classic forms of decoration can be adapted to the occasion with a little alteration, but in the case of the staff work must be built up from the beginning. The same is true to a large extent of the decorations of the other main buildings, the decoration of the Machinery building, for instance, being formed of cog wheels, pinions, incandescent lamps, switches, and many other things peculiar to the two sciences of the machinery and the electrical.

THE MODELING SHOP. To return to the modeling shop, the first thing striking the eye of the visitor was a modeler in clay engaged in making a pattern for the keystone of the arch over the main entrance to the Agriculture building. A large plaster keystone of handsome design, measuring fully two and one-half feet in length and three feet in height, had been utilized as a base on which to build up the striking ornament which will attract the attention of visitors to the keystone. This ornament was nothing more nor less than a big turkey gobbler, life size, with tall outspread wings drooping, looking for all the world as though he were about to spring from his perch and strut about among the chickens, ducks, geese and other barnyard fowls, which were lying around on all sides of the gobbler. This ornament, which is ready to take their place on the Agriculture building, this keystone will crown the arch of the main entrance only and but one cast of it will be made. The modeling process is the same as though a hundred gobblers were to be mounted on the building to add to the picturesqueness of the scene.

Other modelers were engaged in making patterns for capitals for the numerous columns which will form a part of the decoration of the Agricultural building and of the columns themselves. As a rule the standard types of capitals and columns of the various schools of architecture can be found in patterns with slight change in the detail or the decoration. The type of capital is selected and the desired changes are made with a chisel. For instance, the original modelers the patterns are made of wood and in many cases the moulds from which the casts are made are also made of wood and the staff moulds in stone.

MAKING THE CASTS. After the moulds are made they are taken to the large shop in the Mines building, where the casts are made. This shop is about 250 feet in length and about fifty feet wide at its widest part. The original modelers the patterns are made of wood and in many cases the moulds from which the casts are made are also made of wood and the staff moulds in stone.

Freight officials of an Iowa line said: "I have not seen the new tariff which Mr. Sargent has issued, but have read all about it in the papers. The fact that Saturday was a Christmas day and the new tariff was not in effect until Monday, so far as the railroad officials are concerned, has delayed consideration of the matter. Nothing can be done before Monday. It is probable that the Iowa lines will probably receive their copies of the new tariff. It is hard to say what will be done, but the matter will receive very careful consideration."
