STATE TO BE APPROPRIATELY REPRESENTED

Representatives Pledge Themselves to Make a Creditable Showing of the Wonderful Resources of Their Great Commonwealth.

Yesterday was Arkansas day and a big their state, which have been almost un-delegation from that state came to Omaha known outside of the state. He advised the to imbibe exposition enthusiasm and make arrangements for an exhibit of the resources of that great state, which shall put to shame mississippi region. Like all the visiting be erected on the bluff tract as a home for the weary travelers from Arkansas who visit sition grounds and examine it in all its glory.

There were thirty men and one woman in the party, which arrived at the Webster street depot at 1:15 p. m. yesterday. The woman was the wife of Colonel E. T. Mc-Counell, warden of the Ambansas penitenthary at Clarksville. The delegation was met at the depot by a special committee, consisting of President Wattles, R. W. Richardson, Dudley Smith, E. E. Bryson, Fred Metz, H. K. Burket, M. C. Peters, H. J. Penfold and G. W. Holbrook. A special trolley Bee building, where they called on the edi-car was in waiting and in this the trip was tor and inspected the building, afterward mode at once to the exposition grounds, where they made the tour of the grounds. The visitors were most favorably impressed with the appearance of the buildings and the magnitude of the scale on which all the errangements seemed to be projected, and this afternoon or this evening and will then expressed themselves very freely in the most start on their return trip. complimentary manner regarding the energy and ability which had compassed such a bers of the Arkansas Exposition commiswork and advanced it so far toward sion, but all are equally enthusiastic reompletion.

He promised an exhibit from that state which shall be a credit to the exposition as well as to the state.

Before taking his seat Colonel Vincenheller said that Governor Jones had wished very much to be of the party, but had been detained at home by the cares of state, but had sent along a representative in the per-son of the secretary of state, Mr. A. C. Hull. GLORIES OF ARKANSAS, President Wattles asked Mr. Hull to respond for the visitors as the representative Mr. Hull said he had been requested by the governor to prepare a few which to regale the people of Omaha, and in order to do so properly he put them in writing and would read them. He prefaced his remarks as follows: We are here as representatives of a great state for a purpose. We came in obedience to your very courteous and urgent invitation. You had a purpose in inviting our commission to visit your elegant city and ton. You had a purpose in inviting our commission to visit your elegant city and your grand and magnificent exposition in preparation. You wanted Arkansas, with her varied and wonderful possibilities, added to your great enterprise, to the end that your exposition might be augmented in its attractions, and its success more complete. Indeed may I not say your "show" would not be complete without Arkansas; Again, we take it, you wanted our state given a fair opportunity to be represented properly along with her sister states of the great transmississippl section.

I assure you, gentlemen, that we properly appreciate your kindly considerations of our interests, and also your very hearty reception of our commission and your characteristic western hospitality. But with all this I want to say we are here for business as well as to enjoy your generous entertain-as well as to enjoy your generous entertain-ment, and we are here to look after the inment, and we are here to look after the in-terests of our state somewhat ourselves, and I am sure you will not think us selfish for that. When we come to consider the possibilities of our state, its wonderful re-sources and its varied interests, we feel sure that we have nothing to lose, but everything to gain, by an exhibition of products at your coming exposition.

to gain, by an exhibition of products at your coming exposition.

Arkansas has an area of 53,850 square miles. The topographical features of the state present along its southern boundary an undulating, hilly country, timbered with pine, oak and hickory. Going northward the surface is more and more hilly, although in central and northeast Arkansas are found large prairies. Crossing the Ozark mountain region to the north the traveler finds himself in a fully, broken country. The large rivers, the Mississippi and the Arkansas, the one bounding the state on the east, the other dividing it almost in half, are navigable for steamboats. White river, the Ouachita and Red rivers are navigable for quite a large number of miles each. Railway transportation facilities have not kept pace with the progress of miles each. Railway transportation facilities have not kept pace with the progress of the country, being yet very inadequate to the development of our resources. In other states the railroads have pioneered settlement and development and eivilization; in Arkansas they have succeeded settlement, and up to the present time we only have about 2,600 miles of railroad within the state.

All the manifold resources of the great state as a cotton producing, lumber produc ing, mining, grazing and manufacturing sec tion were set forth in detail, with figures to support the statements, many of which must have fallen with surprise on northern ears

BUSY MODELING THE STATUARY Artistic Decoration for the Exposition is Well Under Way.

The statuary which is to add the finishing touches to the beautiful and stately Agriculture building is being modelled in this city by Sculptor Englesmann, who came here from St. Louis for that purpose. The gen eral character of the statuary was briefly outlined by Architect Cass Gilbert before he started for Europe, and this has been amplified by Mr. Kimball, of the firm of architects-in-chief. From this data the sculptor is now making his clay models, which will be submitted for approval before work is commenced on the full size groups, which will appear on the building.

The central pavilion of this building will receive the greater part of the decoration. Over each of the entrance arches will be spandrels ornamented with figures, while the pavillon will be surmounted by a number confer with the exposition officials regarding of groups. Two groups will represent fountains, figures with water pots being em-blematic of the rains which produce moisture for the ground. The signs of the zodiac will also be represented by other groups. Above all of these will be a large, central group, representing Prosperity, supported at either side by figures representing Labor and Integrity. The wide frieze over the entrance arch will be occupied by a figure symbolizing Abundance, and at either end of the frieze will appear the arms of the state and the ties after the exposition opens. Before that time comes we will do everything within our

On the end pavilions will be groups representing the seasons, Spring, being depicted on the east end and Autumn on the west. Reclining figures in these groups will repre sent the favorable winds Along the front of the building, curmounting the columns, will appear single decorative female figures, bearing cereals and other farm products.

Accident on L Street.

The attention of the city council has been called several times to the dangerous condition of L street between Twentieth and street is not paved and washouts are numerous. Yesterday while George Karli was driving along L street near the intersection of Twenty-third street his horse broke through a thin crust of earth and fell sverurning the buggy and throwing Mr. Karll the ground. The horse and buggy were damaged and Mr. Karll was quite badly bruised. Only a short time ago the East Sile Improvement club petitioned the coun-cil to repair the washouts and take steps to prevent the water from Twenty-fourth street running east on L street. Nothing was done and the accident mentioned is one of the results of inaction on the part of the street commissioner.

Two Good Billiard Games. One of the best games that has been played yet in the handicap billiard tourney at Foley's occurred yesterday afternoon between W. A. Traverse and Johnny Murphy. It looked something like a sure thing for the former, but Murphy surprised his friends by pulling out winner by ten points, the score being 150 to 140.

Traverse started out as if he had a cinch on the game. In the first string of fifty he ran forty-one before Murphy had passed the six point. The latter pulled steadily along then. The highest run was eighteen, made
