fcars of Shot and Shell on Eight Ironbound Veterans.

WAS A VALIANT FIGHTER

Stirring Reminiscences and Interesting Puture Possibilities of the Quaint Engines of War at League Island.

Scarred and indented with the marks of shot and shell the eight old monitors at League Island, Philadelphia, which are being overhauled to test their fitness for service in case of need, display indisputable evidence of the worthy service they rendered during the civil war. The turrets of every one of the stout little sea warriors bear the imprints of cannon balls, testifying to the numerous engagements in which they took part. The records of the navy prove, re-away, their qualities as coast and harbor de-fense vessels were not lost sight of. Hence it is quite in the natural order of events that orders have been received at Washing-ton to start the engines on the old monitors once more, and thoroughly test their ma-chinery. One by one, the monitors are being towed out into the reserve basin to undergo the test, and it is believed that their engines will be found to be still in comparatively good working order. Necessary repairs will be made, however, and the eight iron-bound veterans will then only need gun batteries to be ready for service.

During the war of the rebellion the monitors had batteries of heavy smooth bores and Dahigren guns, the most scientific then in use. It is now proposed to place modern rifles in their turrets if it is found that the guns can be properly mounted and that the old vessels can stand the strain of firing the powerful new places. They were built proverful new places. powerful new pieces. They were built staunchly, however, as was well proven, and it is anticipated that they will stand every test well. Stationed for harbor defense, they would prove ugly customers for any invading fleet.

The monitors are the Montauk, Mahoput Manhattan, Canonicus, Nahant, Catskill, Jason and Lehigh. They were all built in 1862, and are of about the same size, from 500 to 550 tons register, with a speed of six knots an hour. It was on March 9 that the celebrated encounter between the little Monitor and her well known, that engagement sealed the doom of wooden vessels for paval warfare and the success of the Monitor led the government to build a number of similar ronelads, among which were the eight now being overhauled at League island.

The Montauk has an especially distinguished naval record. This monitor first came into prominence on February 28, 1863, during the blockade of Charleston, S. C. Two wooden vessels in the union blockading fleet had been crippled by two armor-clad confederate rams fitted. out in Charleston, and there had been other disheartening reverses. Commander John L. Worden, who made himself a hero as commander of the Monitor during the Mer-rimac engagement, was in command of the Montauk, which was ordered with other ves-sels to bombard Fort McAllister, overlooking the Great Ogeechee river. In the river the confederate cruiser and the blockade runner Nashville had been penned or some time by the union fleet. A line of piles driven in the river prevented a dash past the fort, but Commander Worden ran the Montauk up to the piles and shelled the Nashville at a range of 1,200 yards. A FURIOUS ENGAGEMENT. On April 7 the first serious attack on Charleston was made. Of the monitors in the union squadron, the Montauk and Na-hant were prominent, as was also the Cutskill. They ran past the batteries on Morris island without returning their fire, and bombarded Fort Sumter and Fort Moultrie at close range. The cannonading from the forts was terrific, and the fire was returned as hotly from the monitors and other vessels of the fleet. But the attempt to reduce the forts and capture Charleston did not suc-ceed. The Nahant was close to the belching fire from the forts, and was disabled during the action. The heavy fire on the moni-

The Nahant was repaired in time to take The Nahant was repaired in time to take part, in company with the monitor Weehawken, in the sharp engagement with the confederate ironcial Atlanta, on July 17, 1863. The Atlantia was fitted out in Savannah, which was then under blockade, and came out of the harbor to give battle to the two monitors. So confident were the confederates in the invulnerability of the Atlanta, which was a second Merrimac, that several steamboats loaded with excursionists steamed out from Savannah to witness the armorciad whip the little monfors. But the action was short and decisive, for the monitors are properly in the Cafe Inglaterra, the headquarters of the reporters in Havana, Francisco to laz, a reporter of the rabid Spanish paper tion was short and decisive, for the moni-tors poured a fire into the Atlanta that was specific breaking her to pieces, and her commander hauled down his flag.

The Manhattan, under Commander J. W. A. Nicholson, was one of the four monitors sent to reinforce Farragut's fleet for the capture of Mobile, during the summer of 1864. Every schoolsoy knows, or ought to know, that Furragut, during the engagement, was lashed to the masthead of the flagship Harford, and that when the squadron wavered because one of his vessels feared to cross the line of torpedoes, the brave admiral shouted: "Damn the torpedoes!" and ordered his ship to be the first to cross. At the bombardment and capture of Fort At the bombardment and capture of Fort Fisher, which was followed by the surrender of Wilmington, N. C., the Canonicus and Mahopae played important parts. Fort Fisher was the lock in the gate, and on the control of the gateway depended the maincontrol of the gateway depended the main-tenance of Lee's army. The confederate general sent word to Colonel William Lamb. the gallant commander of Fort Fisher, that it must be held or the confederate army MEMORABLE FALL OF FORT FISHER. In December, 1864, Admiral Porter col-leded a fleet of pixty vessels, the most formidable armada of the war, to reduce Fort Fisher. Two attacks were made, and the Fisher. Two attacks were made, and the fort was captured by a land force after having been severely handled by the guns of the fleet. The Mahopae and Canonicus during the engagement were stationed, with, three other ironclads, only a half-mile from the fort, drawing its heaviest fire. The fall of Fort Fisher and the capture of Wilmington cut off Lock supplies and hastened the control of Lock supplies and hastened the control. cut off Lee's supplies and hastened the end of the war.

The Jason and Lehigh also figured as valiant fighters, and no other group of eight vessels could have shown a better record during the war than the old monitors at League Island.

The Montauk likewise has a claim to historic interest in addition to her honorable naval service. When the body of J. Wilkes Booth was brought back to Washington after the assasination of President Lincoln it was placed on board the Montauk, then lying with her sister monitor Saugus at the Washington navy yard. The body of Booth was kept on the Montauk for thirty-six hours, and was examined by the surgeon general temporary prisons for the incarceration of the conspirators who planned the deaths of President Lincoln, Secretary Seward and other members of the administration. With the exception of Mrs. Surratt, who was taken to the penitentiary, the conspirators were all taken to the monitors as soon as they were captured, and held there until the prisoners were executed or taken to prison to serve their sentences. It was believed that the monitors would be safer places for the investment of the correspondent the imprisonment of the conspirators, pending their trial, than any jail.

General L. C. Baker, chief of the War General L. C. Baker, chief of the War department detective bureau, received orders to "put Booth's body where it will not be disturbed until Gabriel blows his last trumpet." It was consequently a popular belief that the Montauk carried the body to sea for burial; but the testimony of Lieutenant L. B. Baker, one of the army officera in charge of the body, is to the contrary. He stated that the remains were taken down the Potomac river in a rowboat, and a heavy ball and chain was taken along to give the ball and chain was taken along to give the impression that the corpse was to be consigned to the river. Under cover of darkness, however, the rowboat went to the old penitentiary, or arsenal, where the body was temporarily buried under a stone floor. It was afterward removed, the lieutenant stated in a letter, and interred in Baltimore.

During the last of these conferences it is said the Cuban question came up casually, and the minister took occesion to remark that he supposed after the American and Spanish boards of inquiry had submitted their reports the whole matter would be submitted to an international board of inquiry.

Judge Day is represented as having given a negative reply. To this the minister is cald to have excitedly replied that such was justed by the minister making an apology, which induced Judge Day to refrain from proceeding to an extremity. This impression has been created by the fact that inquiries at the control of the control o

Late Captain General Charged with Fixing Havana Harbor. amed on January 24, at 10 o'clock at night, 2 met in the Cafe Inglaterra, the headquarters of the reporters in Havana, Francisco Diaz, a reporter of the rabid Spanish paper that La Union Constitutional, with whom I frequently exchanged news.

On asking him if he had anything to give me, he took from his pocket a letter and handed it to me, saying: "Weyler wrote this letter to Santos Guzman, who sent it to Novoe (the editor of the Union Constitu-tional) for him to read and write an article on the acceptance by Weyler of the candi-dacy of deputy to the Cortes for Havana, I took this copy, which you can keep."

The letter was addressed to Don Francisco de Los Santos Guzman of Havana, and reads de Los Santos Guzman of Havana, and reads as follows:

My Distinguished Personal and Political Friend. Since the latest events I have changed by views about the attitude which our political party in Cuba ought to assume. If I have thought before that it was more dignified for us to abstain from the electoral contest, I believe now that it is a patrictic duty for us to go to the polls. Our success can not be doubted, nor that with a program of defense of the national honor we will have side by side with us all those lukewarm politicians who, though Spaniards by heart, are deceived by the inside combinations of Moret and Sagasta and take as scientific solutions of our colonial problems what are really dishonorable humiliations of our country before the United States. Writs on your flag, the flag of Spain, "Defense of national honor," and I offer you my name as your candidate. After having commanded during two years 20,000 Spanish heroes in Cuba I shall be more proud of that of deputy from Havana at the Cortes of Spain.

By the way, I have read these days that the Americans are pendering about sending one of their war ships to that city. During my command in Cuba they did not even dare to dream about it. They knew the terrible punishment that awaited them.

I had Havana harbor well prepared for such an emergency. I rapidly finished the work that Martinez Campos carelessly abandoned. If the insult is made I hope that there will be a Spanish hand to punish it as terribly as it deserves.

Romero is in better health than his friends could have expected, and notwithstanding how morally sick I feel breathing this humiliating atmosphere it is well so. Your affectionate friend and servant.

Laine says that he read the letter and pigeonholed it. When the Maine arrived he called at the office of the Union Constitutional to see Diaz, in an effort to secure the original of the letter. Some days after the Maine explosion Labre met Diaz, who asked him if he remembered the letter and what its contents were about the American war ship. The American correspondent replied that he did and that he believed some one had followed Weyler's advice. Laine says that he has since found out that Diaz formed the chief of police that he (Laine) nad a copy of a letter written by Weyler which might bring trouble to the Spanish government, especially as he was an Amevican newspaper correspondent, who was as-sociating with Captain Sigsbee.

On March 4 Laine was arrested by the chief of police of Havana. His friends were informed of his being imprisoned by a cabman who knew him. According to Laine, Chief Paglieri said to him: "Well, sir, we have you here secured, and let me tell you that the secret that I know you possess will never be known through by others, as no one will ever know what become of you."

Laine replied: "If you think that you can murder me as were Araza and Posasa, the two young men who were taken from here and killed in the Cerro, you are mistaken." The colonel replied in a calm, but stern way: "No, sir, I am not mistaken."

"You may not be mistaken," said Laine,
"but I can tell you that at this moment
the French, as well as the American, coment has been notified that I am here."

This changed the chief's attitude some-what, but he persisted in trying to secure information from Laine.
"I know," he said, "all about a copy and the trouble you intend to cause with it, but I do not care very much about that. What I want to know now and I hope you will answer me, in consideration of the it may bring you, is what information did you give to Consul Lee on the 21st of February about your suspicions of a plot sug-gested by that letter and the placing of dynamite mines in the harbor, with which fact you said you became acquainted during the period of your incarceration in the time of Weyler?" "This was really a surprise to me," Laine's narrative continues. "I had referred to the incident of the letter to General Lee and also spoken to him about what I had seen during my imprisonment in the Cabanas fortress, which lasted for more than a year.

during the most bloody period of the reign of Weyler.

"I had noticed for several nights mys-terious works which were being done in the fortress. On inquiring from a soldier whom magazine of the fortress large quantities of Judge Day is asserted to have responded that the United States would determine the question of Spanish responsibility for the loss of the Maine in its own way without reference to what the cations of Europe might expect or consider proper. This is said to have so angered the Austrian minister that he forgot his diplomatic training and used extremely violent language to Judge Day. If the scene took place as described, it is said, no other source would be open to the president than to give the Austrian minister his pessports.
