Any slight insult or offense-and a German student is very "touchy" and frequently most willingly offended-may be made the occasion for a challenge. The make-up of a duelist is remarkable.

As to grotesque appear ce the foot ball player cannot compare with the German student. The right leg and the chest are amply protected by cushion-like garments; the right arm is guarded by a padded glove reaching to the shoulder, the neck is safely covered with heavy wrappings, and the eyes are shielded with tin goggles. The rules and regulations regarding the combat are *11:30 am intricate and are strictly enforced: The duel utes' actual fencing, has passed, or when one of the combatants has received a wound which the attending surgeon considers somewhat serious (abfuhr). To receive an ab-fuhr is no dishonor, while any show of fear is considered disgraceful.

Ducling is, of course, forbidden by the law. The authorities, however, connive at its breach, and interfere only when fighting is done to excess or threatens to degenerate into mere slashing. The offenders when caught in the act are committed to the Carcer, the students' special prison.

BLUE FEVER IN LONDON.

Visitor (after a long discourse on the virtues of temperance)-I'm glad to see a little boy here wearing the blue ribbon. That's a good little fellow! Billie Groggins-Please, sir, I'm Hoxford!

"Can George sing from music?" "Rather! He can sing as far from music as any one I know!"

He—While courting each of us had a wheel. Since marriage my wife has exchanged both wheels for a tandem, and she scorches past every beer garden to beat the band.
