Pension Question.

The pension question has engressed the at-tention of the entire Grand Army during the year as never before. Prior to the assembling of the last congress there seemed to be a covered attack (put the personer, and no mg many of the id selders the impression prevaled that it did not originate in the camp of our enemies. At all events the newspapers all contained stat ments, many of them distorted and misleading, but ap-parently unatheritative, which left the pensoners as a class in an unenviable light. That these attacks were unfair and meant for a specific purpose seemed to be evident. for a specific purpose secured to be evident, and their object was presumably to prevent any increase in the appropriations for pensions during the incoming congrass over that of the preceding year. This thought also seemed to be followed in the granning of pensions, or at least was looked upon as one of the reasons for the delay in additional persons are persons as a length of the persons for the persons for the persons are persons as a length of the persons delay to the persons and persons and persons and persons are persons as a length of the persons a the reasons for the delay in adjudicating claims, although there has been a steady increase in the number granted.

The proposition to publish a list of pensioners placed the Grand Army in a peculiar position. No man believed there was any accossity for it, and that it would produce any possible good, or that there were any considerable number 71 fraudulent pensioners on the roll. On the other hand, the opposition of the Grand Army to the publication yould at once have been seized upon and taken advantage of by the pension opponents as evidence of our knowledge of fraud and a disposition to conceal it. Our only recourse was to suffer in silence or with simple indigent denials, and look to the future for vindication. I therefore appointed a com-

Plea for Colored Soldier.

A somewhat dramatic episode arose at this time by the appearance of a colored woman on the platform bearing a small photograph of the monument to Colonel Shaw, the negro officer who was killed at Fort Wagner. The bearer of the photograph was Mrs. William Scott of Lathrop, Mo. She proceeded to explain briefly what had been done to honor the memory of this negro officer and made an earnest plea for the recognition in a broader way of the faithfulness, bravery and efficiency of the 1897 record of the negroes in the army. Mrs. Scott then, upon request, sang in a touchingly clear voice a song which was a pleafor a better recognition of her race. Business was further interrupted by the entrance of three ladies from the Women's National Relief corps, headed by Mrs. Martin, the national president. Mrs. Martin, after reading a report of the year's proceedings, which showed a large balance in the treasury and no liabilities, stated that when the call for help arising from the war it is imperatively necessary that the exwith Spain was made she found no authority to use the funds of the corps in that thority to use the funds of the corps in that way, but she took the responsibility of sending out a call for an emergency fund show in our and in this way had collected a large sum become less interesting, comrades are soon of money, which was immediately applied suspended and the posts become delinquent. of money, which was immediately applied to relieve the wants of our soldiers.
