TOLD OUT OF COURT. Heard a couple of good ones on this trip, announced one of Detroit's traveling men to a Free Press reporter. "At a little town in Oklahoma court was in session and I dropped in while waiting for the train. The prosecution had taken the testimony of a stationary engineer and the attorney for the defense took hold. "Where were you the day this thing happened?" he inquired. "What tribe did he belong to?" "The day before a case had been tried in which a man had climbed to the top of a freight car laid on a siding. He had no business there, but loosened the brake. The car started down grade, gained speed rapidly for five miles and then turned a somersault over an embankment. His collar bone was broken and he got a verdict for $500 because a smart lawyer convinced the jury that the railroad was guilty of contributory negligence." "Your worship," said the wily London solicitor, who was defending the stalwart prisoner in the dock, "you cannot possibly convict my client of housebreaking. I submit, sir, with all deference, that neither morally nor legally can you convict him. I will tell you why: "Mr. Sikes, here, as the evidence clearly proves, did not break into any house at all. He found the parlor window open, as the witness admit, and all he did was to put in his right arm and remove some unimportant articles. Now, sir, Mr. Sikes' arm is not he himself, and I fail to see how you can punish the whole individual for an offense committed by only one of his limbs." "Very well, sir," said the cautious Solomon of the bench, "I have heard of a similar defense before today, so I find the prisoner's arm guilty, and sentence it to six months' imprisonment. The gentleman himself can accompany it or not, as he chooses. Mr. Clerk, read the sentence." Then Mr. Sikes smiled a fourteen-inch smile, and the plan of the defense became apparent, as he quietly proceeded to unscREW his guilty cork arm, and leave it in the custody of the court. Twenty-five years ago Ben Harrison and Dan Voorhees were opposing counsel in a murder case, the former prosecuting, the latter defending. The state of Indiana had found fault with one Bill Smith—that was not his name, but 'I will serve—because Bill had killed a farmer. It was a most unprovoked murder, for Bill and a party of roystering companions had stoned the farmer's house, and when he appeared without the meat to make physical protest they set upon him most savagely. He was stabbed to death with a jack knife in the hands of Smith. Harrison was called in to assist the prosecuting attorney. It was a great day at the county seat, and the court house was packed to witness the battle royal between the two giants of the forensic arena. Smith was a very unpromising candidate, for nature and a bad ancestry had made a low-browed degenerate of him to begin with, and his own efforts had not improved his makeup. While the witnesses were being examined he leered and grinned and spurted tobacco juice vigorously extracted from a quid which, from the swelling in his cheeks, seemed to be of about the size of the ordinary egg of commerce. Voorhees, calling each juror by his first name—"Bill," "Jim" or "Jack," as was his wont—made a most impassioned plea for the young man, begging his twelve peers to "give him just one more chance." He rung the changes on that text for three or four hours, and the more eloquent Voorhees became the more Smith grinned and expectorated. When Voorhees had finished Harrison walked close up to the prisoner, regarded him most attentively for a length of time that seemed an hour to the jury and spectators and an age to the culprit, and after he had finished his survey exclaimed in mock continuation of Voorhees' speech: "Yes; give him one more chance!" And the deadly sarcasm in his tone was like a thrust to the heart to the defendant. With malignant deliberateness Harrison sized up the degenerate again for an interminable length of time, and the jury could not help doing the same. "Give him one more chance!" hissed the cold-blooded, cruel Harrison, and then the haying began. If ever a man was verbally skinned alive that same Bill Smith was, and Voorhees acknowledged after the trial that his client's fate was sealed when Harrison first mutely called the jury's attention to the prisoner's utterly depraved appearance and then sneered, "Give him one more chance!" Smith got twenty years, which Mr. Voorhees declared was a light sentence, considering all the circumstances. Recognized the Czar. Detroit Journal: Arrived at The Hague, Universal Peace, in the person of a beautiful maiden, with stuffed doves in her hat, was introduced around by W. T. Stead, her manager. First, of course, the imperial projector of the conference was presented. "The czar," said Mr. Stead, bowing. "Charmed to meet you, Mr. Reed," exclaimed Peace cordially. "You don't look a bit like your picture!"
