GOOD PLAY ON TENNIS COURTS. National Championship Tournament

Brings Out Large Attendance. NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 17.—Splendid weather continued to favor the tennis play-NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. II.—Splendid weather continued to favor the tennis players in the national championship tournament today and the largest crowd of the week thus far was on hand.

The great attraction was the championship doubles between Ware and Sheldon, champions last year, and Ward and Davis, winners of the east against west match yesterday and challengers of the championship. Davis' playing was the leading feature. At first he smashed a great deal into the net and out of court and Ward's steadiness prevented his side from losing many games. When the score stood four games all in the first set Davis began to steady wonderfully and from that time his smashes were almost invincible. He fairly drove his way through the next two games and won the set 6-4. They also won the next two sets 6-4, 6-3.

Next in importance to the championship doubles was the Huntington-Stevens match in singles, which was a long-drawn-out affer.

General Roget next spoke of the arrest at Belfort of Quenelli, declaring that Picquart cooked up the allegations of spying against Quenelli in order to attract to him-self the approval of his superiors.

The witness then dwelt upon the alleged devices of Dreyfus to procure information from the various bureaus in regard to the mobilization and concentration of troops pointing out that while intelligent and in dustrious, Dreyfus was "far too inquisitive in matters which did not concern him, to the detriment of his proper duties."

Replying to a question of the court, General Roget said that so far as he knew Dreyfus had only once been given an imaginary task as a test.

The prisoner listened intently to the witness. Dreyfus' self-control contrasting markedly with his excitement of yesterday. M. With reference to the "Document Liberateur," a document forged in order to secure the release of Esterhazy when he was court-martialed, General Roget said he only knew how it reached the ministry of war adding that its disappearance from that ministry was a mystery. But he said doubtless Paty de Clam could explain the matter. Counsel for the defense here wanted to know how, under such circumstances, Paty de Clam's intervention in behalf of Esterhazy could be explained. But the witness could only attribute It to Paty de Clam's "moral conviction of Esterhazy's innocence."

"In any case," said the general, "the general staff must be entirely disassociated with the part played by Du Paty de Clam in this matter.' "Certainly," replied M. Demange,

"I attach great importance to this point," was the general's next remark. M. M. Bertulus, the examining magistrate, was the next witness. There had been general staff, he first appointed Dreyfus to lively anticipations of an interesting confrontation. The magistrate inquired into the charges made against Esterhazy by his cousin, Christian, and it was expected M. Bertulus would be confronted with General Roget, who so tartly criticised the magistrate yesterday. But the president of the court invited M. Bertulus to proceed with his deposition.

The witness spoke in a low, husky voice, which was almost unintelligible to the court and counsel. He was ineffectually urged to raise his voice.

M. Bertulus described how Major Ravary asked his assistance in examining the secret | characterized as "the irregular steps" taken dossier at the Cherche Midi prison and how, by General Mercier to accomplish the arrest after he had learned the contents of the documents, he declared to Major Ravary that there was a flaw in the dossier which would occasion the collapse of the whole case.
