OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUNG SOCIETY MEN

Few Legal Marringes in Porto Rico-Prize Fighting as a Profitable Occupation-Valuable Relies from Cuban Battlefields.

"Are you a married man?" inquired goodnatured and jovial Charlie Rutherford, wellknown railroad man, to a dapper looking young gentleman who appeared at his office yesterday with a letter of introduction from one of Rutherford's eastern friends.

"No, sir; 4 have not yet arrived at that happy stage in my career," was the reply. "Well, what in thunder are you looking for a position as a stenographer for? Do you want to work, man, or do you want a position of ease and indolence where each day is a continual round of pleasure from the time you arise in the morning until you seek your downy couch at night?"

This was rather a startling question, and the possibility of a job, such as described by been trying to persuade himself for some time that he ought to go to work, and such a position as Rutherford had briefly pictured to provide all the distinguished guests of ration that will be in harmony with the pur-

The face of the young man addressed was itself into an appealing look of interrogation and seemed to cry out, "Where, oh, where?" in lieu of the power of speech which for the moment apparently had fied.

"You want to know where, eh? Why, out other day his speech was certainly thick, at Manitou. I just returned from that place while from the odor of his clothes and and there are about fifty women for every man at all of the hotels. They are offering good salaries for men at all the hotels there, and if a few are not imported pretty soon the young girls and their maiden aunts will be 'hiking' out for some other clime where men are more

A newspaper man was among the interested auditors to Rutherford's narrative, and after it was finished he was called to one side and told, confidentially, that Rutherford was evidently putting up the talk for the purpose of increasing travel over the Rock Island to Manitou and other western resorts.

"There are very few legally married people in Porto Rico," remarked a returned American officer who is staying in Omaha. "How is that?" he was asked. There is a very valuable and interesting collection of relics from the battlefields about Santiago in the office of the city comptroller in the city hall. The owner of the collection, who is also the man who gathered the articles together, is too medest to allow his name to be used, although he labeled the treasures himself. The collection is doubly valuable for the reason that it brings to light several Important Thirty-two shipbuilding firms have about the war hitherto entirely unnoticed, if not actually unknown.

For instance, one of the relics bears the label, "Portion of a horseshoe from General Shafter's mule." It will be a matter of surprise to a great many Americans to learn that Shafter rode a mule. Richard Harding Davis and the other high-priced correspondents have entirely overlooked that important point. Another relic is a pipe stem used by a Spanish soldier. From proposition to affiliate with the American this it can be seen that the Spanish made Sederation of Labor is announced to have use of exactly the same kind of pipe stems that are used in cob pipes in this country. Some archaeologists hold that this shows that the Spanish in the trenches about Santiago were very poor, while others equally eminent believe that it shows the Spanish soldiers already had a weakness for American things before they surrendered and were therefore much easier "meat" than they would otherwise have been.

A part of General Pando's watch chain, or the charm from it, is among the relics. It is a woman's hand fashioned in gold, pos sibly modeled after the devoted hand that waved the general goodby as he left home to practice Horace Greeley's favorite advice. It was accidentally detached from the general's watch chain as he pulled out his watch to see if it was time to report Wood and Cotton Reporter's figures are 116 home government. > order, went through the funeral ritual. Commander Maynard then called upon Brother M. Wulpi to pay the tribute of the Pythians to their deceased brother. Brother Wulpi said that when he received word at Denver of the death of Brother Maul, whom he had known intimately for years, he was thankful that his mission there was accomplished so that he could hurry home to the funeral of his friend. He knew him to have been a man who held his integrity as a thing sacred above all else. He was a man that had so lived that his friends now asked why it was he had been taken away, when there were others one would expect to be taken first. But it could only be answered that such was the way of life.

The quartet sang beautifully a second selection. Master Mason W. W. Keysor then gave the principal address for the Masons. He reviewed the active part the deceased had always taken in the work of the order and with what uniform readiness he had always listened to any demand upon his time or sympathies, whatsoever its nature. The speaker protested strongly against the tendency of professional and business men of the present day to become so absorbed in their pursuits as to neglect to come to the services of their dead friends and pay the last respects. Samson, the high lord chancellor and righ bower of Ak-Sar-Ben V, has issued an edict to all the faithful who reside in the realm and all those of the common herd who de sire to be elevated to knighthood. He has commanded them to be at the Commercia club rooms from 11 o'clock to high noon tomorrow, there to make merry and rejoice over the prosperity of the reign of the king. The high lord chancellor of the order of the Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben has issued a second edict. He has declared that from 11 o'clock until noon all of the whistles in the city must blow and all of the bells must ring and, what is more, he proposes to see that this edict is obeyed. He proposes to make it an Ak-Sar-Ben hour. The grand prophet of the order has worked the telephone company and has arranged that every knight in the city shall be notified of the meeting. Each knight will be expected to be present and each knight will also be expected to have the name of some candidate who will be at the den Monday night, there to be inducted into the mysteries of the order. After the hour during which the membership committees are reporting and the whistles and bells are ringing, lunch will be served. This function will continue for a couple of hours, during which there will be speeches for the good of the order and toasts to the king.
