from the Klondike.
All through December a long procession of men passed Fort Selkirk bound for God's country, relates Forest and Stream. All Jew peddler to the millionaire mine owner, and it is only fair to the Jew to say that him. Some trudged and tugged at heavy sleds and were their own dogs, as the saying went, and others trotted along behind

It was a gaily caparisoned procession and to a certainty that their provisions would not last them to the coast and who had no idea what they would do when the food gave and white, or blue and white, or tawny fox skins and the richer and darker furs. Even the face masks and projecting heads, when seen at a little distance, carried out the masquerade idea suggested by the dominolike packies, but a closer inspection of the government messenger, who late in Decem-ber, was the first man in from the outside world. "Coming down the river I met over 300 men on their way out and most of them if they were on a picnic and as if the devil were really dead, and they didn't seem to met. With the pants burnt off their legs and faces on them like brown parchment, they casins I'll need for the trip and the like when I was born on a snowdrift and got my Americans would storm hell if you thought the heat had melted out any gold down there, and you'd put up so good a bluff and be so hard to kill, I'll be bound you'd get some of the stuff if there was any there." The restless energy of the '97 Klondiker was an insoluble enigma to the hardy voyageur. He did not recognize it as the out-
