SHORT STORIES OF THE DAY

Adventures of Sylvester Frank Wilson, Formerly of Nebraska.

NOW AGUINALDO'S AGENT AT HONG KONG

Nebraska Boy's Career in the Navy—Effect of a Trumpet Blast at a Revival Meeting—Colonel Stotsenburg's Early Military Life.

Sylvester Frank Wilson, mentioned in the dispatches from Hong Kong as a member of the Aguinaldo Junta there, is well known to the older residents of Omaha, to whom his latest fantastic venture will be no surprise. Any one who knows Wilson, however, will be inclined to demand an acknowledgment from Aguinaldo himself before believing that Wilson is in truth one of his representatives. Wilson flourished in Nebraska eighteen or twenty years ago, when he was publishing a paper at Humboldt, Richardson county. His sheet was of the wide-open variety and was well qualified to be called the father of yellow journalism. Because of it he became involved in a controversy with a man who called himself "Doctor" Gandy, and the latter had the editor arrested by the United States marshal for violation of the postal laws in sending obscene matter through the mails, most of which matter concerned Gandy. Wilson was brought by the authorities to Omaha and confined in the county jail. Here he posed as a martyr by writing articles on the freedom of the press and getting them printed in the local papers. About this time George Francis Train happened along and being attracted by Wilson's fulminations took up his cause, adding much to the self-styled martyr's notoriety in his own peculiar way. The burden of Train's song was, like that of Wilson, the freedom of the press.

After Wilson's release from jail he went out over the state, representing himself as a correspondent of The Bee, only to be discredited by a warning to the public when he was discovered. Then he went to Philadelphia and repeated there his Omaha experience, starting another yellow sheet and getting into jail for some of his publications. He went through the same program of bidding for sympathy in oppression and succeeded in stirring up quite a sensation. After that Wilson drifted from one place to another, finally landing in Kansas City. He claimed there to be a newspaper man of experience, and, having a rather pleasing personality, succeeded in getting control of enough capital to start the Penny Post, which soon developed in the same kind of a sheet as he had published in Kansas City, leaving a large number of debts and a reputation by no means desirable. The following spring he reappeared as the manager of a female base ball team, which played several games there. Hearing that a warrant was out for his arrest, he again left the city suddenly. He was then last sight of until he appeared in New York and was imprisoned for a term of years for some serious crime. Now he is heard from as an agent of the Filipinos in Hong Kong. The dispatches convey the impression that his duties consist of smuggling arms and munitions of war to the insurgents, and if this is the case the Filipinos have a good man for the purpose. Wilson was a handsome man, of good presence and gifted with the power to make men confide in him. While he was in Nebraska he always turned up at Lincoln to serve as a lobbyist in the legislature, and, judging from the successes he made of his own schemes, he must have been a valuable servant for others.

Although much has been written concerning Nebraska's representation in the Philippine campaign, especially since the return of the First Nebraska, but comparatively little is known of the state's representation in the navy. One of Nebraska's naval representatives is Senior Lieutenant Matt H. Signor, now on the gunboat Castine at Hilo.

In 1885, when George W. E. Dorsey was member of congress from the Third district, he was notified by the Navy department that he was entitled to the appointment of a cadet to be educated at the Naval academy at Annapolis. During the previous winter C. B. Signor, editor of the republican newspaper at Plum Creek, had visited Washington during the session of congress to plead his case before the senate committee, to whom had been referred his claim of $10,000 indemnity for the blunder of a colored soldier, who shot off his right arm at Memphis in 1864, Mr. Signor being a civilian. Mr. Signor said to the committee: "I do not ask for this indemnity for the act of the servant of the government because I cannot make a living, for I can; but I have a son in college at Hastings, Neb., and I find the burden of his education too much for me, and I have to go to the bank and borrow for him." A member of the committee from Stroudsburg, Pa., answered: "If you have a son to educate, the government has two institutions of learning, the college of Yale and Harvard; if a soldier of the government has wronged you, why not try to have the government educate your son?"

Mr. Signor found the limit for entrance to the United States Military academy was from 16 to 18 years, and at the Naval academy from 14 to 17 years. His son was about 15. So he took the first train for Annapolis and put in a full day visiting the academy. After interviews with Superintendent Ramsey, Lieutenant Green, Chaplain and Mrs. McAllister, Lieutenant Ritterhouse and Lieutenant Letzke, he concluded that a naval course keeps a young man busy at drill and study, and is so exacting that two-thirds of any class that begins the four-years' course fails to keep up and is discharged before graduation.

Congressman Dorsey gave notice for a competitive examination, and ten bright boys from as many different towns met in Fremont and competed for the honor before five examiners. The son of a worthy widow at West Point, Neb., was chosen, and Matt Howard Signor of Plum Creek was named as alternate. The West Point boy went to Annapolis in September, but failed to pass the entrance examination. It may sound curious, but it is nevertheless a fact, that one of the reasons given why he would not do for a commander in the United States navy was that there was too little arch in the bottom of his feet.

Then came Matt Signor's turn to try for it, and in May, 1886, he and 120 other boys, nominated from all parts of the country, endeavored to pass the entrance examination. There were eighty who succeeded. Of these only thirty-nine were able to keep the pace and graduate in 1890. Though from an inland, non-maritime state, young Signor served during the last year of his academy course as cadet lieutenant when the school was out for drill.

He served for two years in Pacific waters on the cruiser Charleston, under Captains Remy and Dickins, visiting China, Japan, Sandwich islands, Mexico and Chili. For six years he was a junior officer on various United States vessels on the Atlantic, visiting many ports of the United States, also of England, Portugal, Morocco, South America, West Indies and Central America.

When the Maine was blown up and sunk Ensign Signor was in charge of a section of the fifty-five gunners having a two-months' drill with cannon and targets in Port Royal Sound, S. C. These gunners belonged to the North Atlantic squadron, five of them to the Maine, and Ensign Signor then wrote his letters in Nebraska that his section of the fifty-five gunners having a two-months' drill with cannon and targets in Port Royal Sound, S.
