At the high school, where there are 400 pupils, there will be to be eight escapes; the Bloomer building, where there are over 500 children, there will have to be ten or eleven; at the Twentieth Avenue, with 470 pupils, there will have to be ten; at Pierce Street there will have to be eight and at Eighth Street seven. The Third Street school will require six, the Second Avenue school the same number, Avenue B, Madison Avenue three and Thirty-second Street school three, while two will be sufficient for the Harrison street building. In all the district will be called upon to erect about ninety stair fire escapes, ranging from two to four stories in height. This is estimated to mean an outlay of anywhere from $15,000 to $25,000. Under the ordinance even the new school at Cut-Off when completed will have to be provided with one or more of these stair fire escapes.

President Sims, in discussing the matter yesterday, said: "I do not believe fire escapes are proper appliances for school buildings. In fact, I am opposed to them, as I believe that in case of an alarm of fire the children would fall over one another in the rush down the escapes and more would be killed than by any other fire itself. With the system now in vogue and the broad staircases in all the school buildings, down which the pupils can march eight abreast, any building can be emptied in from two to three minutes. The children regularly drilled and, even at Washington avenue, where there are about upon 900 pupils, the building can be emptied in three minutes. The danger from fire in any of our school buildings is very slight. It is not like a hotel where the danger from fire is principally when the guests are asleep. The children are in the school buildings and how the children would act in a real case of fire, but if the teachers keep their heads I do not believe there would be any difficulty in getting all the children safely out of the building down the broad stairways."

Chairman Atkins of the committee on school buildings and grounds is opposed to fire escapes on the schools. He said yesterday: "I am not in favor of putting fire escapes on the school buildings because I believe that in case of fire more children would be killed or injured by falling down or by the escapes than by fire or accident in escaping by the present stairways. Fire drill is practiced in all of the school buildings, and, as I understand it, any school can be emptied within three minutes' time. I believe that the principals in every building should pay particular attention to this drill."

Yesterday was "bootleggers' day" in the federal court and a number of violators of Uncle Sam's internal revenue laws were tried and found guilty.

John Jackson, colored, of Crested Butte, was guilty of bootlegging, but the jury decided otherwise. The jury in the case of Frank Smith of Clarinda found he was guilty of bootlegging, as it did in the case of George H. Martin of Hamburg.

The testimony had been introduced in the trial of Lou Mosby of Clarinda, charged with bootlegging, the evidence sustained the plea of an alibi and the case was dismissed by the prosecuting attorney without being given to the jury.
