from visiting the White city on Sunday, and the recital in concert of the creed and then the crowds out there were extraordinarily the prayer. large. A great many people from Council Bluffs and South Omaha and from towns as far away as Lincoln helped to swell the usual Sunday attendance with the result that the grounds were well filled with people during the afternoon and evening. The largest crowds come at 3 o'clock to hear the sacred concert in the Auditorium by packed with an audience that was intensely enthusiastic throughout the program, and insisted upon having a double bill, the regular one and another made up of encores. Mr. Belistedt good humoredly granted every request, as is his habit and which is one of the reasons of his great popularity here. The bill for the afternoon was essentially one to please musicians and lovers of music, says he does not play classic programs, and simply designates them as grand programs, in contradistinction to the usual popular musical menu given during the week, but the music at the afternoon concert verged very nearly on the classical order. The opening number was the big "Tannhauser" overture, noisy and full of sound, but for all that extremely pleasing after so many things that are all melody. A difficult number, and one that is seldom attempted by anybody but an orchestra, was the great overture to "Phedre" by Massenet. This selection was of an extremely sensuous nature and begins with a flery movement, full of uncontrollable passion and vehemence, and ends with a theme of love, the guilty declaration of Phedre to Hippolytus. The work is one of the most ambitious of the great French composer, and was given worthily under the careful and sympathetic direction of Mr Bellstedt. There were other good numbers from a paraphrase on "Nearer, My God, to Thee," by Reeves to the world-famed "Miserere," from "Il Trovatore." The concert was brought to a close with the beautiful and delicate "Invitation a la Valse," by Weber.

In the evening the two chief numbers were the popular and pretty overture to "Semiramide" and the "Symphonie," minor, an andante movement, by Beethoven The latter was a notable number and called forth great enthusiasm. The "Soloists" Carnival" was a comical selection, in which the musicians vied with other to ascertain who could play the longest and loudest.

The other features of the day were welt with the blowing up of the Maine. This attraction was given for the last time, and the new spectacle of a ship moving over submarine mines will be put on today for the first time. After the program for the the Transmississippi states are better at the day was over the people flocked to the dirferent buildings and examined the many things of interest to be found there. There men generally are of the belief that the was a noticeable sprinkling of working people on the grounds-people who have but little leisure except on Sunday, and they seemed to enjoy the day thoroughly.

Change in Music at the Exposition.

OMAHA, Oct. 1 .- To the Editor of The Bee: I hear from apparently reliable sources that the exposition managers are on the point of closing the successful work of the Bellstedt band in connection with the Omaha show and supplanting it for the final weeks with a band picked up in Chicago. The Bellstedt band has unquestionably struck the popular chord more than any other one feature of this year's show because it has sought to please the public in every possible way. It is an organization of forty-five members, while the Chicago band with which the management is said to be dickering has only thirty-five. The Bellstedt band has achieved a reputation in this section, while a new band will have to be introduced. while a new band will have to be introduced to our people and by the time its abilities become known the gates will have been closed. Why should the exposition make such a risky experiment at this time? Why swap horses while crossing a stream when the horse we have is the best we have ever ridden and satisfactory in every respect?

I want to register my opinion, shared by a large number of friends with whom I have talked on the subject, that the exposition erary. Mr. Ingham said that trade conditions in present time than ever before since he began to journey through them. He says Englishyears. He is pessimistic regarding the years immediately succeeding, because he believes another agitation of monetary systems, incidental to the next election, will bring about a reaction. Mr. Ingham says he believes expansion will be a splendid thing for the merchants of this country, and as an example points to the record of his own firm, which began business sixty years ago in a very small way and today is selling goods in all of the English colonies. Rylands & Sons have enormous factories in fourteen cities on the continent and have in their employment over 10,000 men. The products of these establishments are shipped to every country of importance in the world excepting South America.

afternoon that resulted in one of the principals slashing another across the back of the and he was placed in the city jail to sober spinal column. The injured man's name is James Dusatko. He lies at St. Joseph's hospital in a critical condition. Julius Koffman, a friend of Dusatko's, who assisted him in the fight, was cut on the elbow, but the wound, although painful, is not serious and he was allowed to go home. The man who wielded the knife is Mike Milich, a butcher was locked up in the city jail on the charge of cutting with intent to kill. The fight took place about 5 o'clock in an alley at the side of Kessler's hall, 1216 South Thirteenth street. Half an hour earlier at South Omaha the three men boarded a car, starting for the city. Duwas room by the two men and asked them to move over, but the request was refused. The trio were evidently acquainted, because Milich, when he passed along the footboard to another seat, is said to have made an insulting remark connecting Koffman's name with that of a young woman they both

Hot words were exchanged on the way to town and Koffman and Dusatko determined to avenge the insult offered them by Milich They alighted from the car at the corner of Thirteenth and William street, where Koffman lives. Standing on the sidewalk they saw Milich get off a block or two farther down the street, in front of Kessler's hall. Then they ran down to the alley through which he had walked toward the side door of the hall.

Each of the contending parties says the other struck the first blow. A number of bystanders saw the trio pitch into each other half way down the alley. They saw a knife blade flash and saw Dusatko drop to the ground with the blood spurting from a deep cut in the neck. He lay perfectly motioness. When Koffman noticed his friend was seriously hurt and at almost the same instant felt the knife blade drawn across his own arm, he turned and ran, leaving Milich indisputed possession of the field.

Policeman Lahey, attracted by the gathering crowd, came in time to catch a glimpse of Milich scurrying out of the alley at the other end. Giving chase, he overtook the runner in a few minutes and, having led him back to the patrol box and turned in a call for the wagon, sent him to jail. Lahey says Milich threw away a knife just as he stopped running to submit to arrest. The knife was recovered. The blade was dripping with blood.

Dusatko and Koffman were taken to drug store for attention and later were removed to the police station, where Dr. Ralph sewed up the cuts, the one in Dusatko's neck requiring ten stitches. It was nearly an inch deep. The injured man lives at 1246 South Fifteenth street. He is a bookkeeper n the offices of the Pacific Express company. Koffman lives at 1402 South Thirteenth street. He is employed in the glycerine department of the Cudahy Packing company. Milich is a butcher who works for the different packing houses in South Omaha, not keeping a place permanently.

Cut in the Stomach Mrs. Couston of 1215 Chicago street came o the police station Sunday night and complained that Virgile Johnson had cut her little son in the stomach with a knife. She said that Johnson had been chasing several children around in the neighborhood of Twelfth and Davenport streets and among them had frightened little Morris Miller very badly. Later he took after Mrs. Couston's little boy and stabbed him. Luckily the knife was a dull one and the blade blunt or else the stab might have proven
