PRIZE ESSAYISTS REWARDED

Public Distribution of Home Patronage Bureau Trophies to Pupils.

PLANTING GOOD SEED IN FERTILE SOIL

Effective Method of Sending Home a Lesson in the Economy of Building Great Cities and Strong Communities.

As an educator on the beneficence of patronizing home industry the public distribution of prizes Friday evening by the home patronage bureau of the Commercial club among the children of the public schools was an unqualified and unbounded success. Boyd's theater was crowded, the greater part of the audience being children of assorted ages, variegated raiment, sharply contrasting, but ever tumultuous decorum and voices of indistinguishable shrillness. In their midst were many parents and elderly relatives, whose presence was presumably intended to preserve order, but their proximity did not seem to overawe the youngsters, who seemed to realize that it was their night to howl. In the boxes with their ladies were Messrs. D. T. Mount, Fred Hoye, C. O. Lobeck, W. W. Bingham, Myron D. Carr, Harry B. Zimman and W. B. Whitcomb, members of the council; B. F. Thomas, C. S. Hayward, J. F. Burgess, W. M. Howard, W. F. Johnson and other members of the Board of Education and City Clerk Higby.

Chairman E. B. Andrews of the home patronage bureau referred to the history of the organization of the bureau, which now has a membership of eighty-six factories and which has for its object impressing upon the minds of Omaha people the necessity of buying the product of the factory located at home instead of buying a similar article manufactured elsewhere, and by this means increasing the number of employees and families and the population of the city. Omaha's reputation upon the commerce, and commerce is dependent upon the factories. There are in this city and South Omaha 150 factories, employing and supplying one-third of the population. They are all growing, but can be given much stronger impulse if given due consideration by home people. Home support of the factories located here will bring other factories. Home patronage is but another form of patriotism and those who follow it aid themselves, especially if they be property owners. Speaking of the recent exhibit of the bureau, Mr. Andrews said that it is estimated that during the ten days of its continuance it was visited by 80,000 people, who were amazed and delighted to see what Omaha produces. He explained how fifty prizes had been offered to stimulate children of the schools in writing essays on the subject of home patronage and closed with an expression of thanks to teachers, principals, the superintendent of the Board of Education and the pupils for the interest they had manifested, over 10,000 essays having been prepared on that subject. He introduced General Cowin as presiding officer.

Cowin Speaks.

General Cowin congratulated the committee on the happy thought that prompted this movement among the children of the common schools and paid a tribute to the schools, the foundations of the republic. He declared that he would not make a speech, as he had been told when asked to preside that he would not be required to do that, as there would be those present who could make speeches.

E. J. Chissell, chairman of the promotion committee of the bureau, commended highly the surprisingly clever work of the pupils and read as earnestly of the excellence of the judgment of two of the essays submitted, those of Master Ray Coffin of the Saratoga school, and Miss Mamie Ethel Strum of the Long school, each of which showed careful research and an accurate understanding of the advantages of patronizing home industries.

G. M. Hitchcock of the World-Herald expressed some diffidence in speaking even to the young people present upon a subject to which they had given weeks of careful study. Patronize home industry is a maxim which, like the maxims that "Virtue is its own reward" and "Honesty is the best policy," speaks for itself. The simple proposition given, little else can be said. Each appeals of its own accord to every hearer. Home patronage is a desirable not alone because it will make the city rich, but because cities, like individuals, must develop or degenerate. Lincoln's remarks as to the protective tariff were quoted wherein he said that when you buy iron rails in England Americans get the rails but the Englishman the money, whereas if you buy rails in America Americans get the rails and the money, too. The same principle applies to the home patronage movement in Omaha. If the west avails itself of its opportunities by manufacturing and consuming its own productions it will soon be as desirable a place in which to live as the east.

F. W. Kellogg of the News declared that as a newspaper he was impressed by the meeting as he had not been before with Omaha's greatness. He had recently been surprised to learn from General Manderson that Nebraska's percentage of literacy was higher than that of any other section of the United States. He facetiously concluded that the fact that a great many of them came from Ohio accounts for the general intelligence of the people of this state, adding that he came from that state himself. He pointed out the importance of factories in the upbuilding of cities and the wisdom of patronizing such as are located in our midst.

Chairman Cowin excited considerable merriment by introducing Edward Rosewater as "another great editor, orator and statesman; a young man who, however, has had great experience, who has done a great deal toward the upbuilding of the city and who has succeeded in building up a great newspaper without taking any personal part in politics himself."

Edward Rosewater's Address.

Mr. Rosewater referred to Peter Cooper's early invention of a self-rocker for his first baby, which useful article of household economy he provided with a patent for fear of scaring away flies and a music box, to lull the child to sleep. This was the initiatory effort at fostering the infant industry. The speaker went back 200 years to recount the infliction of a protective tariff in France for the protection of the industries of that country, which occasioned the migration of large numbers of skilled workmen from England to France, and showed how old was the doctrine of protection to home industry and how early people realized the necessity of it. He called attention to the great industry in the construction of railroad iron that has grown out of the requirement of the government that every pound of rails used in the construction of the Union Pacific should be made in this country. Going back in the history of Omaha, he said he could recall the time when there was not, as he could recall it, a factory in the city. Today more than 20,000 people draw their sustenance directly or indirectly from Omaha's factories. The Bee started out with one editor and one compositor, and now pays over $300 a day in wages. The World-Herald pays as much, or nearly as much. Mr. Rosewater said that for reasons not easily understood, the wives of old Omaha men are in the habit of expending large sums abroad for things that could just as well be bought at home, and that the visitors from Omaha alone to the Paris exposition will expend abroad in that way fully $100,000, while the aggregate expenditures of Americans abroad during the exposition for things that could be purchased

OFFICIALS TAKE UP BURDEN

Administration of City Affairs Falls on New Shoulders Monday.

KARR FOR PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Mayor Will Return from Outing Today, but His Preferences for Appointive Offices Will Not Be Expresed Until Week Later.

A call has been issued for a meeting of the council on Monday afternoon to effect an appointment. Myron D. Carr feels confident that he will secure the presidency. He counts on the votes of Councilman Hascall of the First ward, Hoye of the Second, Zimman of the Third, Whitehorn of the Fourth and Trostler of the Ninth. The chairmanship of the various committees is still undecided. Councilman Burley could probably retain his place at the head of the finance committee, but feels that he has borne the onerous duties of the position sufficiently long and may decline a reappointment.

Fred Hoye has not filed his bond as councilman, but is expected to do so today.

Counterfeit Silver Dollars.

Sergeant Rebut and Officer Wilbur Thursday night found forty-seven counterfeit dollars concealed in the woods on South Twentieth street, near the South Omaha line. Officer Wilbur received a tip that the spurious coin was there and he went to the place designated, accompanied by Sergeant Rebut, and found it, but was unable to discover any trace of the makers. There were no implements or dies with the money and it is supposed that it was planted there by the gang of counterfeiters which had their headquarters in that locality two years ago and two of whom, "Story" Brown and John McCarty, are now in the penitentiary. The coin was turned over to Captain Webb of the United States secret service.
