was considerably ruffled by the event, and naturally, for Miss Kennard occupied an enviable position in society and the disappointment of not seeing the winsome miss in her wedding robe was keen. The unfortunate part was having the groom called hastily to cards Saturday afternoon, Europe by important business and thus cheating Dame Society out of an elaborate Mrs. Remington last week. function, not to mention the annoyance to kind-hearted friends who throw rice and old shoes and who consider it their bounden duty to make the "honeymoon" a time of torture just to insure by their acts of good will a happy married life on the grounds that a bad beginning makes a good ending.

The charm that hangs about so many western wedding tours was clearly explained the other day by the remarks of a recent Benedict: "The western winds would take the friends, starch out of any bride. When Nell and I The boarded the Denver train her hair was blowing in seven different directions, her hat was coquettishly dropping over one ear, her prim tailor suit was beaten by the wind till she presented a most delapidated appearance.
