IOWA NEWS ON SEVENTH PAGE.

AFTER THE TAX SHIRKERS

Law Passed by Last Legislature is of Considerable Importance.

AFFECTS CONTRACT WITH CUNNINGHAM

Possibility that This Enactment Will Involve the Board of County Supervisors in Litigation—Outline of the Case.

The law passed by the state legislature at its recent session permitting counties to enter into contracts for the discovery of property withheld or concealed from assessment for taxation and limiting the compensation that should be paid for this work has a direct bearing on the contract entered into last November by the Board of County Supervisors with F. M. Cunningham of Indiana and will possibly involve the board in more or less litigation.

Under the contract with Cunningham the supervisors agreed to give him 50 per cent of all moneys recovered through his efforts in listing property that should be taxed, but which had hitherto been withheld or concealed from assessment. The contract is for a year and a half and Cunningham for two months or more has had a force of clerks at work here. Similar contracts have been entered into by other county boards throughout the state.

The act recently passed by the state legislature, while giving counties authority to enter into such contracts, fixes the maximum compensation to be paid for the work at 15 per cent of all moneys recovered in such way. It further provides that contracts heretofore made by county boards for such work are valid if the parties within thirty days after the passage of the act sign a written agreement to accept the 15 per cent in lieu of all compensation or of any different amount provided by such contracts. In the event of no such agreement within the thirty days the contract heretofore made will be invalid.

Cunningham is Now Sick.

Cunningham is not at present in the city, being laid up sick at Guthrie Center, where he has another contract similar to the one here, and therefore his intentions are cannot be learned at present.

When it became known that this law was likely to pass the legislature a number of persons like Mr. Cunningham employed in ferreting out property for taxation succeeded in introducing a bill to repeal section 1385 of the code and substitute one which they believed would offset the new law. The substitute read as follows:

Section 1385. The auditor may correct any error in the assessment of tax by himself or by a deputy or by a person authorized to appear before him at his office within five days from the time of said notice and show cause, if any there be, why such correction should not be made, and should such party feel aggrieved at the action of said auditor he shall have the right of appeal therefrom to the district court.

And if such correction is made after the books have passed into the hands of the treasurer he shall be charged or credited therefor as the case may be. All expense incurred in the making of said correction shall be borne by the party by whom the funds which are affected by said correction are

THE PROCEEDINGS TO BE REPORTED TO THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

This, however, was killed on the start. It had passed, as the introducers believed it would be, unnoticed, it would have given county auditors authority to incur practically any expense in listing property which had escaped taxation and thus this county would have been able to pay Cunningham the 50 per cent as agreed upon in the contract.

Claim Law is Unconstitutional.

It is contended by some of the new law is unconstitutional, inasmuch as it abrogates existing contracts, while on the other hand it is maintained that this law is a public necessity, as the law was the boards of supervisors exceeded their authority when they entered into contracts such as they did, agreeing to give 50 per cent of all moneys recovered.

State Senator Hazelton says the law was enacted on the theory that the contracts entered into all over the state by the boards of supervisors were contrary to public policy.

He said: "When this bill was passed it was understood it would be questioned and that probably the courts would be appealed to. That is what we desire. If the courts will hold that the county boards had the right to make such contracts well and good. If not, then the law will step in and protect the taxpayers. There is a very grave question whether the county supervisors had the authority to enter into such a contract as they did with Cunningham. The compensation they agreed to pay him is considered excessive. There is no doubt that a test case will be brought for the courts to decide as to the constitutionality of the act. The evidence before the committee in Des Moines showed that the system of employing these tax ferrets is in many cases pernicious. In some instances they would practically resort to blackmail and compromise with parties who had property which they had discovered was not assessed at all or else not at its proper value. By such practices the county received no benefit, while the tax ferrets enriched themselves by levying what might be properly called blackmail. The contracts such as many counties entered into gave every opportunity for these sharp practices and the system was thought by many of the members in the legislature to be bad. In my opinion the bill is all right and will accomplish exactly what it is intended to do."

MATTHEW HAHN AN EASY VICTIM.

Gives Up Seven Dollars to an Adventurer Who Disappears.

Matthew Hahn, an employe of the Illinois Central railway, who rooms at 1105 Avenue D, complained to the police yesterday that he had been victimized by a new confidence game at the hands of a stranger. Hahn had come a member of the Masonic fraternity and when a stranger, for the consideration of the small sum of $7, offered to make him a duly qualified Mason, Hahn caught at the bait and willingly parted with his cash. He has not seen the stranger since and he is still waiting to be initiated into the mysteries of Masonry.

The individual who secured Hahn's cash gave the name of Henry Burkall. He struck Council Bluffs Monday last, attired in the garb of a United States sailor, and was accompanied by an elderly man, whom he introduced as his father. They registered at the Neumayer hotel on Broadway, where the "sailor lad," just recently discharged from the United States navy, soon managed to form a number of acquaintances among the boarders and transient guests. Hahn was among the number that became acquainted with the sailor, in fact they became quite friendly and Hahn took much pleasure in listening to Burkall's stories of his sea-faring life. Tuesday Burkall confided to Hahn that he was duly authorized by the Masonic grand lodge to secure and initiate candidate into the mystery of freemasonry. The fee, he explained, would be $7, and of this amount he received but $2, the other $5 being turned in by him to the grand lodge. He said further that he had been the worshipful master of the lodge on the battleship on which he served and it was on being discharged that he secured from the grand lodge the position of traveling representative, with authority to initiate those desiring to become members of the fraternity. The bait thus thrown out caught Hahn and he saw, as he thought, a great chance to become a member of the foremost secret fraternal order of the world at a small expense. The required fee of $7 was forthcoming and soon found its way into the pockets of the sailor. Then Burkall told Hahn there were other candidates waiting to be initiated and he would initiate them all at once the next evening.

When, however, Hahn called the next day at the Neumayer and enquired for Burkall, he learned that the sailor had had no hair and had steered for some other port, leaving in payment of his father's board bill a grip containing the sailor suit.

It was reported to the police that Burkall had succeeded in securing other victims besides Hahn, but their names were not learned.

It was said that every one of the 1,400 union men in the city would stand by the Painters' and Decorators' union in their fight.

Davis, to recover the money now lying to the credit of the district in the hands of the school district. The exact nature of the legal proceedings, he said, had not been determined on, but it was possible that a civil suit would be commenced against Davis and his bondsmen to recover the money now lying to the credit of the district in the hands of the school district.
