and state treasurer. The books of the telephone company do not reveal that there is a "deadhead list," but Yeiser interpreted "uncollectable" to mean the same.

After the incident recited in the foregoing, the investigation settled down to a dry examination of figures as to cost of maintenance and other operating expenses, such as has been going on ever since the beginning of the hearing.

During the afternoon session. Yeiser discovered an entry on the books showing $300 from the telephone company. This item was listed under the head of "maintenance," and under the subhead "material." Yeiser Judge Ragan, ex-member of the supreme court, had furnished. It was then discovered that the placing of Judge Ragan's name under the subhead of material was a clerical error, and that the amount paid him should have been charged to legal services Judge Ragan having been called in consultation with the regular solicitor for the company in an important case. Yelser laid great stress on the fact that while Judge Ragan received $300 for consultation, the attorney in charge of the case in question was paid only $200. "Have you ever paid Judge Ragan money for any other purpose?" Yeiser asked President Yost. Reply was refused. Yeiser appealed to the secretaries, but they over ruled him, and he again declared he would report the matter to the board in person At the close of the afternoon session further hearing was postponed until June 8, for the reason that the stenographers are be hind with their part of the work.

Grading contractors were allowed to remove these walks while doing some grading with the understanding that the planks were to be properly replaced Both these sidewalks were relaid by the contractors, but old boards were used and the work was very poorly done. As these contractors are under bond for the proper relaying of the walks the council proposes to see that the walks are placed in as good condition as they were before the grading or the city will do the work and deduct the cost from the guaranties still in the hands of the city.

Liquor Dealers Worrled. Local liquor dealers are considerably worried over the action of the city council in introducing an ordinance increasing the occupation tax from $200 to $500. According to statements made by Ed Johnston the city needs the money to pay off outstanding claims. This is the last year the city will be able to levy an occupation tax, as next year the caloon licenses will be increased to $1,000 by reason of the showing made by the government census. Then the entire sum will be covered into the treasury of the school district and the city will have to provide other means of securing a revenue aside from that brought in by taxation,
