one question, "and if not, why not?" Mr. Lawton averred to his family and intim-ates that he has never heard of branded cats. Mr. Martin cogitated and resolved to visit the cat ranch to examine into the matter. So he wended his way south-ward and came upon the pleasing spectacle of the head of the feline incubating estab-lishment at play among his stock. Clad in "chaps," blize shirt and wide-brimmed sombrero, Mr. Lawton looked the up-to-date cattleman in the midst of his de-main rather than the agricultural factor, with which personality his associates have always delighted to consider him. Mr. Lawton had deftly roped the rear leg of a gray tommle as Mr. Martin ap-proached, and with the assistance of another gentleman had defty inserted the head of the animal in a capacious boot when he espled the census man. "Hello, Martin," said he, cheerily. "Come right in and watch the process." "What are you doing?" inquired Mr. Martin, with interest. "Branding 'em, of course," returned the telegrapher-cat rancher, contemptiously. "Well, I've come to tell you that the federal authorities at Washington are tired waiting for your reports," said Mr. Mar-tin with firm intonation. "Well, I've come to tell you that the federal authorities at Stast ar any one could," answered Mr. Lawton as he defty grabbed a branding iron from the fire and imprinted it firmly on the cat's off hindquarier, despite the yowing that arose. "Great scheme, this," con-tioned the desectator of Egypt's ancient sacred animals, as he jerked the cat out of the boot and roped another. "The complying with all government regula-tions, depend on that." In view of such perseverance Mr. Mar-tions, depend on that." In view of such perseverance Mr. Mar-tions, depend on that." In view of such perseverance Mr. Mar-tions, depend on that." In view of such perseverance Mr. Mar-tions, depend on that." In view of such perseverance Mr. Mar-tions of the Interior department.
