In one instance a saloon keeper "settled" by paying $51.50 "costs," for which he holds a receipt signed by Lindt & Mynster. Another settled by paying $36.50, while a third claims to have been compelled to pay $75. All the receipts given by Lindt & Mynster bear on their face: "All proceedings in the case of G. W. Long against you to be stopped on condition that you keep saloon closed on Sundays," Despite this provise in the receipts these saloons are still kept open on the Sabbath. John Lindt, Mynster's law partner, disclaims any connection with the injunction suits of Long and says that Mynster attended to them, that he (Lindt) had nothing to do with them. The law provides for an attorney fee of $25 only in such injunction cases.
