Afterward he changed it to a republican paper. On May 31, in his weekly issue of the Globe, Editor Chavannes started his crusade against the existing republican form of government, recommending a kingdom in an editorial given a prominent place on the editorial page. The article has caused wide comment and created a stir in political headquarters of various states. Tonight's Evening Capital says:

Evening Capital says:

It is not a pleasant task in attempting to explain to the outside world the true aittitude of the Globe, to be compelled to discuss the fact that Mr. Chavennes, the editor, while he has not a known enemy, has once been an inmate of an lisane asylum for a period of several months, only being released by the express understanding that he was to be under the guardianship of his wife. It is sad that the exigencles of politics makes this disclosure necessary. Republicans in other states, who have been horrified at the widespread quotation given these editorials, are entiwho have been horrined at the widespread quotation given these editorials, are entitled to know the facts and we believe the law of the land permits the Capital, without malice, to state these facts, because in no other way can these unreasonable and perfectly indefensible editorials be explained.

Mr. Chavannes styles himself an independent republican. His paper is quoted as having a circulation of but 1.700 in the country districts and it has little influence here. Talk about the paper being a lifelong and leading republican paper is ridiculous. In 1896 it was for Bryan and free silver.
