Although most of the swindlers will hesitate to have the exact nature of some of their transactions with the count unveiled to the public gaze, some of the stories told of plans adopted by the swindlers who have been preying upon the little count are almost incredible. This class of debts will be disavowed by the legal representatives of the Gould estate, as will also the claims of several notorious usurers who preyed upon the little count in the most brazen way, but who cleverly cloaked their transactions with the air of legitimacy that will save them from prosecution for outright crookedness. The lawyers of the Gould family believe that they can unravel many of these transactions and show that they were consummated in direct opposition to the law. It is their purpose to do so if possible and punish the swindlers. Look on Bout as a Fool.

The impressions made upon Parisians of a worldly bent, who regularly associated with Count Boni, is that he is a man of decidedly limited intelligence, usually accessible to flattery, inordinately vain and always auxious to astonish and cutdo the wealthiest people of Europe. He courted the attention of wealthy aristocrats and vied with them in silly extravagances. Consequently he was an easy victim of three or four separate gangs of swindlers, moving in entirely different spheres, but whose one common endeavor was a steady and remorseless plundering of the Gould millions over which the little rount exerclard control. The first and most audacious of these gangs of social pirates was composed of men and women of his own circle. During the last five years these persons carried on a systematic swindling game, berrowing money from him without giving security of any character and get-

All efforts of the com mittee had been bent to get every republican voter properly registered as the first prerequisite to polling the full republican strength. The registrations shows that the republicans are in shape for the final contest at the polls, which they will enter with a confidence based upon a substantial found-

Everywhere men once firmly outspoken as democrats came out equally outspoken as republicans, and the number of new voters about to cast their first presidential ballot expressing an intention to ally themselves with the republicans from the republican standpoint: Our latest advices from New York are conclusive that the state will give a large majority for McKinley. Local conditions in Greater New York, well known to the country, will increase Mr. Bryan's vote in that metropolis, but we believe that a majority for McKinley in the state is a most conservative opinion. Evanly in the campaign there may have been some question as to the result in Maryland, but there are signs which presage a majority for that both workingmen and business men will vote according to the dictator of consilence.

Of course the trusts, the great aggregations of combined capital, the seekers for franchises in Porto Eleo and the Philippines, the promoters and exploiters generally have spared no effort, and will spare no effort, to re-elect McKinley. It is my firm belief, however, that the electorate cannot be debauched this year to a sufficient extent to throttle the public will. The country is aroused as it has not been since the days preceding the civil war. The cristence of the form of government established by the fathers is at atake. Whether the trust shall govern the country or the country regulate the trusts must be decided. It will be found when the votes are counted that the people have determined with emphasis that the republic must be preserved; that the power of the trusts must be curbed; that the man is to be considered before the dollar and that the voice of the people cannot be suppressed by attempted intimidation or corruption. The states that will vote for Mr Bryan will show that the people have confidence in him from the Atlantic to the Pacthanan from the northernmost to the southernmost boundaries of the republic.
